OUR 72ND YEAR, NO. 6

February 6, 1986

Questions Eastwood tactics

By MICHAEL GARDNER

WHO SHOULD control the future of Carmel: business interests or the residents?

Charlotte Townsend believes if you answer the latter, then voters should send her back to a third term as mayor of Carmel during the April 8 election.

Townsend, who ran unopposed for mayor in 1984, faces the unenviable task of trying to beat back a challenge by world-famous actor Clint Eastwood. Other candidates are 'Almost anything we do to preserve our unique ambiance of our village truly benefits the business community. It's what you call a long-term investment rather than a short-term profit, a quick buck.'

businessman Paul Laub and Tim Grady, a member of the Environmentalist Party.

Since news of Eastwood's candidacy surfaced last week, just about every major television, radio and newspaper has been calling the mayor.

Her talk with the Carmel Pine Cone/Carmel Valley Outlook Monday afternoon was sandwiched between interviews with Chicago radio and the Philadelphia Inquirer. At the same time, Eastwood's Hog's Breath Inn is more like a press room than eating establishment with journalists from throughout the world descending on Carmel.

Townsend admits that this race has her a little frightened, but her fears are not based on Eastwood's fame.

"People have asked, 'aren't you frightened? Aren't you awed?' I have to tell you now that I am a little frightened. It's beginning to interfere with not just my private life, but my effectiveness in transacting city business," she said of the media crunch.

Townsend is not afraid to take on Eastwood, who staked his claim to fame through early spaghetti westerns, and later with "Dirty Harry" police detective roles.

Townsend, a former librarian, recreation director overseas and journalist, said she offers three things that Eastwood cannot:

"accountability, accessibility and credibility."

Townsend accuses Eastwood of playing politics in a city where formerly "everything was done above board."

Eastwood continually said he was not running for office and he also declined knowledge of a mysterious poll conducted by an Orange County firm just prior to the election filing deadline, Townsend pointed out.

But then Eastwood filed for mayor and admitted to the media that he commissioned the poll.

The mayor said it is impossible for Eastwood to claim that he changed his mind at the last minute about running because "everything was carefully arranged," including his interview with the Pine Cone and those who signed his nomination papers.

EASTWOOD ALSO has questioned so-called "secret meetings" of the council, citing the offer to buy Mission Ranch Resort.

Since the fate of Mission Ranch is in litigation, the council was within its rights to make an offer to buy the property in a closed-door session.

And the mayor, taking a counter-offensive, said Eastwood has no right talking about secret meetings when one considers his poll.

"Mr. Eastwood talks about secret meetings; how do we account for these secret polls of his?" Mayor Townsend questioned.

The mayor questioned what would happen if city officials said one answer and then a week later gave a different account.

"This frightens me...What is a citizen to believe? One must ask one's self exactly what are these people willing to do to meet their political ends?" the mayor said.

"It's a question citizens must answer. How do you feel you will be better served? (By a) quiet, effective government or big ticket, big money, big media and high-priced advisors running our village?"

Stepping up her remarks on Eastwood, the mayor said his election would bring to an end a four-year attempt to return Carmel to its residents.

"If he's elected there's just no question there will be an increase in tourism," she said.

"I think he might make some fabulous mayor for some city that would like to increase its tourists and tax base," the mayor said.

But Carmel already "suffers" from the number of tourists and does not need any more visitors or the businesses that serve them, she said.

The mayor said the key to this campaign is how the voters perceive their city. "The decision to be made by the city is very clear-cut. Would they prefer a business-oriented government in city hall or would

Applauds decision

Dear Editor:

The League of Women Voters applauds the recent decision of the California Coastal Commission to approve the Monterey County Land Use Plan for Big Sur, and to reject the application for an extensive resort development on the beach in Sand City.

The Big Sur plan, which restricts development on the scenic highway to 300 hotel rooms in 30-room units at specified locations, prohibits development that can be seen from Highway 1, and permits construction of 850 new houses, guarantees a shoreline free of overdevelopment.

We are gratified by the decision of the Coastal Commission to reject the Sterling Environmental Center for Sand City as presented to its Jan. 9 meeting. The league had joined the City of Monterey and the Sierra Club in filing an appeal against a project which we considered inconsistent with coastal protection, and as a result inaugurated the commission review which gave opponents a chance to express their views. A league representative testified at that hearing, and we are pleased with the decision reached at that time.

Pool in our future?

Dear Editor:

Carmel should buy Mission Ranch, but, hopefully, not for the reason Mr. Laub suggests in the Pine Cone (Jan. 23) for the use of a parking facility with a shuttle bus provided for transporting visitors to the center of Carmel.

It is in the tradition of Carmel to attempt to keep any beautiful historical area from being destroyed, especially when it is an environmentally sensitive area such as Mission Ranch. If the city needs to submit a well-defined plan for the future use of Mission Ranch, as the Jan. 23 editorial suggests, shouldn't these plans be along the lines of recreation for the community's residents. Already there are the tennis courts and there is plenty of room for the covered swimming pool that has been under discussion for years.

Larry Challis, head swim coach for Carmel High School and for the Barracudas, informs me that the Barracudas now have several hundred thousand dollars toward building a community pool and they would conduct a vigorous fund-raising campaign for a community pool in an ideal location such as Mission Ranch. He regrets that it is impossible to fit the demands of the many residents who want a Master's Program for their swimming into the busy schedule of the high school pool.

This is just one of the future recreational uses for this exceptionally desirable land which in its present state is so much a part of the community.

City needs Townsend

Dear Editor:

"I felt the city of Carmel was not addressing and solving the significant issues and problems of the city," said Mr. Clint Eastwood in a Jan. 30 interview with the Pine Cone.

I am afraid he hasn't done his homework. Doesn't he realize the democratic process moves very slowly? And yet in spite of this the council, under the leadership of Mayor Townsend, has moved steadily ahead implementing the general plan.

A new senior housing complex is being built, centrally located on Dolores. The Gamble property has been successfully saved from overdevelopment. The walkway along Scenic will be a "fair accompli" within a year. The beach restoration program has been a great success. Banks are now secure. New landscaping is in place.

The city hall has been beautifully and efficiently renovated, retaining its former character and fitting well into the neighborhood. Piccadilly Park is a welcome oasis in the heart of Carmel.

These and many more projects have been accomplished under the leadership of Charlotte Townsend. May she be allowed to follow them. We need her and we are fortunate that she is willing to serve again.

Give voters a chance

Dear Editor:

Statements issued by the several candidates for mayor of Carmel are uninspiring and indeed depressing. Their preoccupation with the mechanics of parking, business licenses, etc., is far removed from the vision and idealism which this community needs and deserves.

We should remind ourselves of the Preamble to the Zoning Code, which reads:

"Carmel is essentially, primarily and predominantly a residential city, in which business and commerce have been, are now, and are proposed to be in the future subordinated to its residential character."

That statement, adopted in 1929, has gone unchallenged by successive city governments for 56 years, so it remains valid. It means that businesses are to be permitted in Carmel to the extent that they meet the needs of the residents; it does not mean that residents must adapt themselves to the demands of incoming businesses.

To my mind, "progress" for Carmel is to be measured by the extent to which the community will defend the further its ideals. Is there no candidate who will stand firmly on that platform, and give the voters a choice?

Walking on earth

Dear Editor:

I think that our city council is about to waste millions of dollars of our public funds to landscape our public land by Carmel Beach, and then they want to outlaw walking on our public land. That reminds me of taxation without representation, because no one in their right mind would contribute their money to people who want to outlaw walking on our public property. So they created their Beach Task Force to screen any opposition.

It is ironic how we are not allowed to vote on this misuse of our public money and our public land. Perhaps our politicians in Carmel think that walking on the earth is too trivial for the residents of this city to be troubled with.

Our feet don't cause any erosion. The erosion that does occur on the cliff areas is the result of natural forces beyond the control of humans and ecologists. The fact that our politicians are manipulating the Carmel Beach restoration-erosion project is an example of their ivory tower politics. As if they were rewriting our Constitutional rights as Americans.

I think that we should pass a new amendment to the Constitution to protect our right as Americans to walk on the earth, especially if it is on public land. The ugly chain link fence should be removed and never replaced with anything at all.

Weather modification

Dear Editor:

Over a decade ago, the Soviets were spending more than a hundred million dollars per year experimenting on "weather modification." (See Bulletin of the American Meteorological Society, January 1975.)

That's right. The Russians spend big bucks experimenting on changing the weather. The U.S. spends a lot of money trying to "modify" the weather, but apparently not nearly as much as the Russians.

In 1974, the Senate Foreign Relations Subcommittee on Oceans and International Environment held hearings on the subject. A Professor Gordon J. MacDonald of Dartmouth University testified that modern warfare is changing rapidly, and he further testified: "As economic competition among advanced nations heightens, it may be to a country's advantage to insure a peaceful, natural environment for itself and a disturbed environment for its competitors."

Then on May 18, 1977, our government signed "The Convention on the Prohibition of Military or Any Other Hostile Use of Environmental Modification Techniques" in Geneva.

What does all this mean? Well, it sounds like they have entered into a treaty agreement not to use the weather or "weather modification" as a weapon of war. And that was 10 years ago.

How has the weather been these past 10 years? One is reminded of an important Russian communist who once said, "Treaties like pie crusts, are made to be broken."

Anyhow, you've heard that old saying, "Everyone talks about the weather, but no one does anything about it."

Well, apparently someone is doing something about it. It might scare the hell out of all of us if we knew how much.

'Dear Clint...'

(Editor's note: This letter was sent to the Pine Cone and was addressed to "Clint Eastwood, mayor-to-be.")

Dear Clint:

I must admit that it made my day to learn of your mayoral campaign in Carmel. But pardner, I thought we had a deal...you'd stay out of politics and I'd stay out of Hollywood!

As one veteran small-city mayor I'll offer this bit of friendly counsel: You may find that it will take a "fistfull of dollars" to overcome "the good, the bad, and the ugly" in California politics. Good luck!

Lowell Smith
Mayor, St. Helena

Overdevelopment

Dear Editor:

The approval of the conveyor belt for the Spanish Bay hotel, golf course and condominium project is an example of how hypocritical the Monterey County supervisors are. This tradition of selling out to the developers dominates our local politics as well as our state representative. Our state representatives pretend to be not aware of any opposition to these hotels being built on the coastline. In fact, some politicians have their own personal interests involved with coastal development.

Another example of the "Master Plan" that is being forced on us is the Hatton Canyon freeway which is being designed to serve the new hotel projects planned for Point Lobos and in Carmel Valley. But first they want us to build them a new dam. Only the hotel developers need a new dam.

Our representatives pretend to not be aware of any public opposition to hotel development on the coast. The developers and the oil companies happen to be the same people. Pebble Beach, Spanish Bay and the coastal dunes on Del Monte Beach belong to the oil companies. How long do you think it will be before the oil companies and the hotel developers begin to drill for oil in Monterey Bay or on Carmel Beach?

Wants to say thanks

Dear Editor:

I would like to take this opportunity to say a "thank you," through your paper, to the three people (two ladies, and a gentleman) who came to my aid last Wednesday when I took a hard fall on Ocean and Monte Verde. They were so concerned and I was so stunned, that I didn't even ask their names. The gentleman walked me back to work here at Sundial, and I still forgot to get his name. So, if anyone reading this knows who they are please show this thank you to all of them.

Inaccessible candidate?

Dear Editor:

Last evening, I tried to telephone candidate Eastwood to find out how he feels about the general plan for our village. Finding that he is not listed in the telephone book, I dialed 411 for directory information, and chatted with a charming young lady in San Jose (she told me we no longer have operators in Monterey!) who made it clear that she was not in a position to give out candidate Eastwood's private number.

Next, I telephoned candidate Eastwood's local bar and restaurant. Above the din, I was firmly advised that they were not permitted to give out his phone number.

My question, Mr. Editor: Is it going to be possible for the residents and voters of Carmel-by-the-Sea to reach and speak with candidate Eastwood, to learn of his views on the multitude of vital issues facing our unique village, or must we be satisfied to learn his views through the press releases which I am confident his promotional staff in Burbank can and will be turning out?

Are you the candidate, Mr. Eastwood? Or is it your Southern California staff which, should you be elected, will be running our precious village?

City council incumbents face tough challenge

Councilman Robert Stephenson

By MICHAEL GARDNER

ROBERT STEPHENSON says he's still got plenty of work to do so that's why he wants to remain on the Carmel City Council.

Stephenson, four-decade resident of Carmel, is seeking re-election to his second council term on the April 8 ballot.

"I have been there for four years," said Stephenson, who was elected to the council in 1982 after serving six years on the planning commission.

"I think we've done a good job and accomplished a lot. I would like to complete some of the things to be completed and some of the things projected," he explained.

For example, Stephenson wants the council to finish annexation of Mission Ranch.

"Annexing Mission Ranch is important to the city. As long as we're negotiating to that end I'd like to see that completed to protect the city from growth down there," he said.

And Stephenson, a longtime supporter of a parking facility at Sunset Center, would like another four years to work on that project.

"Some of these things that we get blamed for inaction on, (are postponed) because certain things come up unexpectedly that have to be addressed," he said.

The winter storms of 1982-83 that demolished Carmel Beach is an example of unexpected projects that push other programs to postponement, he said.

The city spent considerable time and money to restore the beach and construction on the walkway is expected to begin this summer.

"The Gamble property coming on the market was something that hadn't been planned. It was something we had to address quickly if it was to be done successfully," Stephenson explained.

The council was successful. In cooperation with a private developer the city bought the Gamble estate, reduced the number of lots from 14 to seven, and sold the lots at a profit.

Projects either projected or in various stages of development that Stephenson wants to see completed include:

- Restrooms at Devendorf Prk and at least in one other location in the city.
- Renovation of Sunset Center.
- New storm drains near San Carlos Street downtown.
- The master environmental assessment, which will provide data and policies to guide Carmel's growth into the 21st century.

AN ALBATROSS for Stephenson — and the council — has been the expansion of Harrison Memorial Library.

Everyone seems to agree that more space is needed, but few are in harmony over how and where to provide the extra room.

The council, although divided 3-2, appears to have settled the issue by approving the annex and accompanying underground parking garage on the northwest corner of Lincoln Street and Sixth Avenue.

The council says the library board can build an annex the size it can afford.

Stephenson was on the losing end of the vote, insisting that the city build a new library at Sunset Center.

He does not see the sense in constructing a small annex that will cost $750,000 and not provide the necessary space.

Stephenson does not believe his strong stand for a new library will damage his re-election bid.

"I think any time you have a thorough discussion on a subject it does no harm. I think I forced a thorough discussion. I don't think it did any harm," he said.

Stephenson defends council practice of ensuring planned growth outside the municipal limits even if it means going to court, which the city has done numerous times.

"What happens outside the city impinges on the city in a dramatic way," said Stephenson, in reference to the numerous smog, traffic and water supply problems outside development imposes on the city.

"Just the beauty of open space, if nothing else, is important," he said.

"If we can slow down some of that growth it will be a benefit to the city," he said.

Stephenson also does not see the council as being anti-business — an allegation imposed by those challenging the incumbents.

"I know they say it and the newspapers say it, but are we really?," Stephenson questioned.

"Most of the business people here enjoy a monopoly...I would expect the shopkeepers would appreciate the fact that we have a high class commercial zone. If it gets to be Santa Cruz or Balboa, it won't be high class," he said.

Stephenson, like incumbents Mayor Charlotte Townsend and Councilman David Maradei, point to numerous business developments approved by this council.

These include Cottage Row, Clyde

Councilman Maradei not one to back down

By MICHAEL GARDNER

CARMEL CITY Councilman David Maradei admits he may be the most vulnerable incumbent in the April 8 election, but he says he will stand on his record, which he believes includes substantial enough contributions to warrant voters sending him back for a second four-year term.

"Four years ago this town was in chaos. The simplest project could not be accomplished. The council was bitterly divided and city commissions were pulling against each other," said Maradei in describing the past council prior to the 1982 election of Mayor Charlotte Townsend, Councilman Robert Stephenson and himself.

"I think the real measure of the success of the city council, and it's not an individual success, is: does it include the people in the community in the legislative process?"

"Have we been a responsive city council? I think the answer to that question is yes."

When listing the accomplishments of the past four years, Maradei's conversation ranged from recreational services to the completion of Piccadilly Park to now-underway plans for a beachfront walkway along Scenic Road.

Maradei's list includes:

- Rehabilitation of Carmel Beach after the 1983 storms, which included replacement of an antiquated, inadequate storm drainage system. The walkway and landscaping work is to begin in June.
- Controls on tourist-oriented businesses through adoption of the Carmel General Plan and its implementing ordinances.
- Passage of a water conservation ordinance that sets aside the remaining resources for residential rather than business use.
- Initiation of a renovation plan for Sunset Center.
- Completion of Piccadilly Park, twice approved by voters. The park site was purchased by a former council.
- Initiation of a recreation program in cooperation with the Carmel Unified School District. Average payback through fees is nine out of every 10 dollars spent by the city.
- Successful purchase, rezoning and resale of the Gamble Estate which reduced the number of potential lots from 14 to six. The city will make about $40,000 on the deal, originally developed to protect the southern sector from additional traffic congestion and water use from overdevelopment of that property.

DAVID MARADEI will seek re-election to the Carmel City Council April 8.

- Approved public restrooms at Devendorf Park. The project will begin this summer.
- Gave the go-ahead to a library annex project that includes underground parking and public restrooms.
- Remodeling and computerization of city hall.
- Successful court battles that helped reduce development adjacent to a city already inundated by cars trying to avoid Highway 1 by cutting through Carmel residential zones.
- Adopted an ordinance to control large two-story homes in single-story home neighborhoods.
- Conducted two surveys of the citizenry to help guide opinions.
- Initiated the master environmental assessment to provide data and policy programs that will guide future building.
- Adopted three-year contracts with city employees to save time and money.
- A reorganization of city hall that brought in "a bright, young and aggressive leader" in City Administrator Doug Schmitz.

- A complete turnaround in city finance accounting procedures after the council learned in June 1983 that it had been misled into adopting a capital improvements budget that was $600,000 out of balance. The budget imbalance, corrected by Schmitz, was developed by former City Administrator Doug Peterson and ex-Finance Officer James Bajari. The city since has adopted a two-year budget to save staff time and costs.

A 43-year-old, nine-year resident of Carmel, Maradei is the station manager of the Carmel Post Office.

Maradei was elected to the council in 1982 after serving on the forestry commission. As part of his council duties he represents the city on the Association of Monterey Bay Area Governments (AMBAG) and is chairman of the Community Human Services project.

One of the more outspoken council members and perhaps the most residentially oriented, Maradei usually is the one who proposes controversial programs. The most recent two are the plan to close the Pebble Beach Gate at North San Antonio Street and the compromise proposal for a smaller library annex.

Maradei admits that his strong stands and willingness to publicly voice opinions unpopular with the business community have made him the more likely to lose of the two incumbent councilmen.

"I'm perhaps the most vulnerable candidate," Maradei said.

Maradei intends to base his campaign on a strong door-to-door push, he said.

MARADEI SAID he seeks re-election to continue the work of the past four years — primarily for residents to gain control of their town.

"I'm running for city council because the city of Carmel-by-the-Sea for the past four years has taken a stand in favor of the residents of this community," Maradei explained.

"I believe that the reason I was elected to public office was because my viewpoint and my ability were recognized as a force which could shape our community toward the residential philosophy that exists in our preamble," he continued.

"I believe now as I believed then that business should be subordinate to the residential community."

Besides Clint Eastwood there are plenty of candidates to choose from in the April 8 Carmel City Council election:

For mayor: Charlotte Townsend, incumbent; Clint Eastwood, actor, producer and director; Tim Grady, professional singer and member of the Environmentalist Party; and Paul Laub, a businessman.

For council: David Maradei, incumbent and station manager at the Carmel Post Office; Robert Stephenson, incumbent and building designer; Elinor Laiolo, wife of former Mayor Barney Laiolo and a retired public school administrator;

Anne Woolworth, interior designer; Bob Fischer, businessman and former Carmel assistant police chief; Don Lampson, a correctional officer at Soledad Prison; Tom May, former councilman and financial asset manager; and Robert Weber, an environmental poet.

Mayor Townsend is up to Eastwood challenge they prefer a residentially-oriented mayor and council?"

The mayor, although a strong believer in 1929 ordinance number 96 that basically states that business shall be subservient to residential interests, says she is not anti-business.

Although there have been several decisions targeted at business — mostly the general plan implementing ordinances, the failed restriction on hours, and the ice cream cone fiasco — the mayor's tenure has seen several

"The decision to be made by the city is very clear-cut. Would they prefer a business-oriented government in city hall or would they prefer a residentially-oriented mayor and council?"

major developments approved. These include:

- Cottage Row, a retail complex on the northwest corner of San Carlos Street and Sixth Avenue.
- Eastwood's two-story retail and office complex on San Carlos Street between Sixth and Fifth Avenues.
- The Little Family's Sands Lodge and Simpson's Restaurant rebuilding project on the northeast corner of San Carlos Street and Fifth Avenue.
- The Gamble estate, which was reduced from 14 lots to seven thanks to a joint city-private developer effort.

TOWNSEND ESPECIALLY berates Eastwood for his comments about the council being anti-business after a compromise was reached on his building.

Eastwood had sued the city over denial of his building, which the council had viewed as being too large and massive.

Eastwood eventually worked out an agreement with the city and he was guaranteed approval. Afterwards Eastwood had nothing but kind words for the city and staff.

Today, Eastwood is criticizing the same people who compromised with him on the building, the mayor pointed out.

"The city has always said let's sit down and discuss our problems and disagreements and see if we can work things out," Mayor Townsend said.

The mayor reminded that in her first term she formed an ad hoc committee of five business people and five residents that has been meeting weekly for several years.

By enacting such stringent controls, keeping out numerous unwanted shops and banning neon signs, the city actually lures visitors to Carmel for the businesses, Mayor Townsend said.

"Almost anything we do to preserve our unique ambience of our village truly benefits the business community," the mayor said. "It's what you call a long-term investment rather than a short-term profit, a quick buck," she said.

The mayor also lists numerous accomplishments over her two, two-year terms, including:

- The beach rehabilitation project that, when completed, will include a walkway and additional access stairs.
- Design plans for public restrooms at Devendorf Park are now underway.
- Completion of Piccadilly Park.
- Starting the recreation program.
- Reaching a final decision on the library.
- Hiring City Administrator Doug Schmitz.
- Keeping the budget at a 1 percent growth rate over three years.

THE CITY has been criticized and ridiculed nationwide because of last summer's ice cream cone fiasco.

But the mayor points out that the issue was not banning ice cream cones.

"You can buy ice cream cones in Carmel-by-the-Sea. People for some reason don't want to believe that. There is not a ban on ice cream cones and there never has been," she said.

The real issue was creating another take-out restaurant. Citizens twice on city surveys have indicated that they don't want more restaurants in town.

"Why is it that when we sneeze it's heard around the world?" Mayor Townsend questioned.

In addition, an ice cream parlor would use too much water, which is in short supply in Carmel.

Strasser Kauffman, council to meet

THE CARMEL City Council and Fifth District Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman will meet in a joint session at 8:30 a.m. Friday, Feb. 7 at city hall.

Although there is no pre-fixed agenda for the informal discussions, Strasser Kauffman did say there are two issues she would like to talk over with the council.

The first is an update on the progress of the Carmel Valley Master Plan and its accompanying environmental impact report.

The city of Carmel has successfully challenged in court lackluster attempts by the county to prepare a master plan.

The courts have ordered a moratorium on discretionary use permits in the Valley until the county develops a plan that better protects the environment and realistically addresses water supply, traffic and sewage capacity concerns.

Strasser Kauffman also wants to discuss with the council the importance of the pending hearings on the implementing ordinances for the various local coastal programs.

The city, because it is impacted by growth

The council also has been criticized for too many lawsuits trying to curb development in the county.

The mayor counters that every development near Carmel draws more people to the already-congested city.

And in the case of Spanish Bay Resort, the added traffic can spell the difference between life and death for someone racing to Community Hospital in the Highway 68 traffic.

The small peninsula with its limited resources and network of roads must work together to solve mutual concerns because what one entity does directly impacts another, she said.

The mayor also questions whether Eastwood — with his world-wide interests — will have the time it takes to run a city.

in adjacent areas, has an interest in the LCPs for the Carmel area, Del Monte Forest and Big Sur.

The ordinances implement by law the policies established in the various LCPs.

CVPOA elects new officers

GENE ERNER, a Carmel Valley realtor, has been elected the new president of the 1,100-member Carmel Valley Property Owners Association.

Lack of parking in city sparks controversy

By MICHAEL GARDNER

CARMEL CITY Councilman David Maradei does not believe that building structures is the sole solution to the parking problems here.

So Maradei has proposed that the city investigate the possibility of a free shuttle service to downtown for residents of Carmel.

Maradei advanced his proposal after the city council Tuesday night began to move on the long-stalled Sunset Center parking facility proposal.

The council has tentatively scheduled a study session on the proposed Sunset Center parking garage for the morning of Saturday, March 15 at city hall.

Tuesday was another busy session for the council, which met for nearly five hours in open session before closing the doors to discuss litigation and personnel matters.

Key actions taken by the council include:

- Approval of subdividing the former Sprouse-Reitz building into two shops. Also required payment of $120,000 in lieu of the applicants providing six parking spaces.

- Approved on first reading an ordinance that will place a moratorium on additional outdoor seating for restaurants. Second reading is scheduled for March and implementation for April.

- Approved preparation of a specific plan for the Countess Kinnoull estate.

- Adopted a resolution that asks the Monterey County Board of Supervisors to reopen for amendment the Carmel Area Land Use Plan. The council basically wants the county to consider its density limits in view of the traffic, water supply and smog problems in this area.

- Denied 3-2 (Councilmembers Helen Arnold and Robert Stephenson dissenting) an application by Chocolate Dreams to sell ice cream at its Ocean Avenue candy store. The council majority of Mayor Charlotte Townsend, James Wright and Maradei viewed the request for 12 seats as creating another restaurant. Citizens in two separate surveys and the general plan discourage new restaurants in town.

- Approved a plan for fire hydrants at strategic locations at Mission Trail Park.

- Continued its ban on parking on Scenic Road one-half hour following sunset.

- Continued a request from the Surf and Sport Shop to sell T-shirts at its store in Red Eagle Lane just off Mission Street.

THE PARKING garage issue was raised during City Administrator Doug Schmitz' report on capital improvements projects.

In his report, Schmitz stated that it's time for the city to consider the Sunset Center parking facility now that several other projects are in progress or completed.

Schmitz calls the facility "potentially the most expensive capital project that this city has ever undertaken." Latest estimates are $5 million for a net gain of 250 spaces in the three-story facility. About 125 cars currently park in the unpaved lot.

Maradei pointed out that the price tag for a parking garage "will be considerable and indebt the city for a long period of time."

Maradei would like the city to pursue the parking garage studies, but at the same time start a pilot program that will provide free downtown shuttle service for Carmel residents.

This would reduce cars coming to town and help resident-oriented businesses and professionals who complain that locals don't shop or use services here because of the parking problems, Maradei reasons.

"It (the shuttle) might have an impact that is more cost-effective," he said.

Maradei pointed out that the parking facility will cost the city approximately $25,000 per space.

Arnold supported Maradei's plan in concept and seemed concerned that a parking structure simply will draw more people to Carmel.

"The more cars you provide for the more that will come to town," Arnold said.

Mayor Townsend suggested that while the facility studies are underway the city should pave the Sunset Center lot and put in some kind of fee system to determine whether people will pay to park there.

The mayor said often the Carmel Plaza parking garage is empty.

The council directed staff to prepare preliminary data on the paving and shuttle bus proposals in time for the March 15 study session.

Parking was also the issue in a separate, complex appeal of a decision by the planning commission.

Commissioners had denied a master use permit to partners Roxy Rapp and George Brook-Kothlow for the former Sprouse-Reitz site on the north side of Ocean Avenue between San Carlos and Mission streets.

The partners want to lease half the 6,000 sq. ft. site to Books Inc. moving from Carmel Plaza and the other half to a yet-unfound tenant.

THE BIG stumbling block was parking.

New businesses that cannot meet city parking requirements pay fees in lieu of providing the spaces. Current fee is about $20,000 per space.

The city also has under preparation new parking requirements that will require even more spaces than the current one space per 1,000 sq. ft. rule.

Under a recently adopted commercial subdivision ordinance, the partners must pay or provide for parking — a rule that will cost them about $120,000. Previously, most remodels and new owners of existing businesses were exempt from the parking requirements.

Rapp and Brook Kothlow appealed to the council Tuesday night, basically claiming that they should not have to pay such high fees.

They argued that their application was submitted long before the new subdivision ordinance was enacted and questioned whether the two stores would generate more parking demand than Sprouse-Reitz.

(Later Planning Director Diane White said the partners did not submit their application until Oct. 28. The ordinance was effective Sept. 23. In a November meeting the partners were told all of the in-lieu requirements.)

The partners also believe that the burden of paying for parking should be borne by all merchants rather than just a few of those who remodel or open new businesses. They propose a parking assessment district would be more equitable.

In addition, Rapp and Brook-Kothlow asked that if the council does demand an in-lieu fee that they be allowed to pay the bill in increments.

But the current city ordinance requires that in-lieu fees be paid at the time the permit is issued.

Following 90 minutes of public testimony, the council required in-lieu fees of about $120,000 for the six spaces.

The council did agree to look at its ordinance for a possible amendment that will allow businesses to pay the in-lieu fees in increments. The fees paid by Rapp and Brook-Kothlow will be placed in a trust so that if the parking ordinance is amended the partners can retain some of their capital and pay the in-lieu fees in installments.

After the meeting, Rapp was steaming at the council.

"I think the whole ordinance is unfair," he said.

"I feel it (parking costs) should be shared by all merchants and property owners. Why penalize one person? It's ludicrous. It's stupid," he continued.

RAPP SAID throughout the process the city never once told him that the subdivision ordinance was under consideration.

He accused the city of being "secretive" about the ordinance. He likened it to "stabbing a knife in you."

But White pointed out Wednesday morning that Rapp and Brook-Kothlow had just talked to the city informally and no application was filed until after the subdivision ordinance was adopted.

Once the partners filed, White said she met with them in November to explain all of the requirements.

As for not telling them of the ordinance, White responded that there are more than a dozen unofficial inquiries a week about projects and it's impossible for the city to notify everyone of pending rules that may or may not affect their project.

White said once an application is filed the applicant is notified of all of the current and pending requirements.

Councilman R. Stephenson

"Of course, the media has it going too. It makes good copy," Stephenson said.

But contrary to talk and media coverage, Stephenson sees this council as quite cooperative.

"I think this council has been cooperative (while) not buckling under to the business people. Certainly we have maintained a commercial zone that is attractive with no lighted signs and lots of greenery," he said.

"Keeping the town attractive makes people come to town and buy things from the businesses."

Stephenson also does not appreciate claims "the loose talk" that this council has spent taxpayers' money unwisely.

Stephenson points out that the 1985-86 budget is $25,000 less than the previous budget and for the past three years the city's spending has increased a mere 1 percent.

The city has hired additional staff in the planning department to meet goals of planning for the future and reworking much of the city codes.

Still, through attrition, the city staff is only three employees more than the number on the payroll four years ago, he said.

"How people can say we're spending taxpayers' money irresponsibly is hard for me to believe...I think we're being very responsible with the people's money," Stephenson said.

Stephenson adamantly believes that those supporting opponents of the council are not presenting the public with facts.

"The people are not being told the truth," he said.

As far as Stephenson is concerned, this election is "a power grab by the business people to get control of the council. I would suspect that the laws passed for the benefit of the residents will be overturned."

Councilman Dave Maradei

Prior to the election of Townsend, Stephenson and himself, Maradei believes that Carmel was controlled by business interests with little regard to the type of shops in town.

"Four years ago the expansionist forces of business were at work in Carmel-by-the-Sea...which was causing an erosion of the quality of our business downtown."

"I believe the residents wanted to see that trend reversed and that's one of the reasons why I was elected to public office."

"Today we have enacted the general plan, we have reorganized the city administration and we have developed a plan for the future that takes us out of the past crisis-reaction mode and we're now in a planned management mode."

Council policy to battle development proposals outside the city is coming under much attack in this election.

Maradei defends council intervention in development issues that affect traffic congestion and water supply for Carmel residents. In addition, he notes that Highway 68 nears gridlock and it's the only route to Community Hospital for Carmel residents.

"That's something I've done a lot of soul searching about," Maradei said.

"I think Carmel has been a leader in understanding the impacts of growth on the city and the surrounding infrastructures, such as traffic, water supply and sewage capacity," he said. "We understood that relationship better because we were more impacted than any other community."

"Spanish Bay is a perfect example. They did not consider the impact of an additional 2,000 cars per day on Carmel. They did not consider the impact on Highway 68 and how it affects our citizens' ability to get to Community Hospital."

BECAUSE OF these impacts, Maradei believes the city council has to try to look out for the interests of the citizens even though the projects may be outside municipal boundaries.

The incumbents also are criticized for their often anti-business stands. But Maradei said the citizens in questionnaires continually say the biggest problems in the city are traffic congestion and over-commercialization, both of which are a direct result of business.

Misunderstanding cleared, wetlands in Carmel sphere

A DISPUTE with the Local Agency Formation Commission (LAFCO) over the inclusion of Mission Ranch in the sphere of influence for the city of Carmel was settled early, however the city and LAFCO still remain at odds over the fate of Pescadero Canyon and the Odello East ranch.

Prior to the Jan. 28 session of LAFCO, the city was gearing up for an attempt to have the Mission Ranch wetlands area included in the Carmel sphere of influence.

LAFCO staff had recommended that the city sphere of influence include the Mission Ranch hotel and tennis courts, but not the wetlands.

However, later conversations prior to the commission meeting cleared "a misunderstanding" and the wetlands were included in the sphere of influence for Carmel, according to City Administrator Doug Schmitz.

Spheres of influence are important to a city or public service agency because those are the areas that can be annexed.

If a city or agency, such as the Carmel Sanitary District, wants to annex, then that area has to be within the sphere of influence. If LAFCO left Mission Ranch out of the city sphere of influence then the property could not have been annexed to Carmel.

In addition, county decisions that affect areas within a sphere of influence also must be made with the position of the city or other public agency in mind as to the future of the property.

And that is why the city wants to also include the Odello East ranch and Pescadero Canyon in its sphere of influence.

LAFCO staff has recommended exclusion of the Odello east property and Pescadero Canyon from the Carmel sphere of influence.

Schmitz, Councilman David Maradei, and Planning Director Diane White made the trip to the LAFCO meeting Jan. 28 in Salinas.

There, the three spoke in support of leaving the Odello property and Pescadero Canyon in the city's sphere of influence. At the same time they criticized the inadequacies of the accompanying environmental impact report (EIR) prepared for the spheres of influence of Carmel, Carmel Sanitary District, Pacific Grove and Pebble Beach Community Services District.

One of the key points made by the city is that the consultant failed to analyze land use as part of the EIR studies.

In addition, the city pointed out that the consultant also did not include in the EIR a required "no project" alternative, which would analyze the impacts if none of the spheres of influence are adopted.

MARADEI called Pescadero Canyon a "natural drainage" area for Carmel Woods.

The county has allowed one home to be developed in the area and the city is fearful that others may follow.

In addition, Maradei claims the trees in the canyon are not maintained and several times fallen limbs and trees have cut power to Carmel.

Schmitz said the city has tried to "look at the long range" in its proposed sphere of influence.

Pointing to the farm areas to the south, Schmitz questioned, "Is it going to be suburban subdivisions or preserved as agricultural areas?"

And Schmitz told LAFCO that Carmel "is the only municipality" to be so greatly impacted by development outside its borders.

Bruna Odello, reading a letter from her attorney Don Hubbard, protested attempts by the city to include the family property in the Carmel sphere of influence.

(A city of Carmel lawsuit has successfully blocked development at the Odello site for the past several years.)

Hubbard's letter noted that "it has never been even suggested that the city of Carmel would expand its physical boundaries to include Odello East or that the city of Carmel would provide any services whatsoever to Odello East."

Hubbard also noted that any development will adhere to the guidelines of the Carmel Area Land Use Plan and all services will be provided by county agencies, not the city.

"It seems abundantly clear that all services that our clients presently receive or are likely to receive in the future will come from the county of Monterey or other governmental agencies other than the city of Carmel," Hubbard wrote.

Supervisor Karas seeking applicants

Fourth District Supervisor Sam Karas is seeking applicants to fill two vacancies on the Commission on the Status of Women. Both appointments will be for three-year terms.

Meetings are held on the first Wednesday evening of each month at the courthouse in Salinas. The commission serves in an advisory capacity to the board of supervisors on a variety of matters relative to women in the country. Among the duties of the commission are to study and investigate matters which demonstrate sex discrimination or prejudice within Monterey County government and to investigate complaints and seek to resolve problems through consultation, conciliation and advice.

Interested applicants should contact Supervisor Karas at 1200 Aguajito Rd., Monterey, or call 649-4141.

Planners to enact sweeping land use changes

By MICHAEL GARDNER

THE FIRST step toward implementation of a series of sweeping changes in city land use policies will be taken by the Carmel Planning Commission Feb. 19.

At that meeting commissioners will conduct a public hearing on the proposed specific plan for the multiple-family residential zone (R-4) and on several draft amendments to the general plan.

The public hearing is to be at 4 p.m. at city hall. Copies of the draft R-4 specific plan and the proposed general plan amendments are available for review at the planning department.

Commissioners got their first look at the draft general plan amendments and proposed R-4 specific plan during a special study session Jan. 29.

Their response was generally favorable toward recommendations prepared by the planning staff and commission committees that had previously reviewed the land use changes.

The most significant policy changes will affect the R-4 zone, the area that encompasses two blocks between Torres Street and Junipero Avenue, two blocks between Third and Fifth avenues, the south half of the block bordered by Junipero Avenue and Mission Street and Third and Fourth avenues, and the north half of the block between Junipero Avenue and Mission Street and between Fourth and Fifth avenues.

There are two major parcels open for development on the west and east sides of Junipero Avenue between Fourth and Third avenues. The property is owned by Tom Handley of Carmel Valley and basically is used for storage and manufacturing purposes.

Handley, who has several times tried to sell the development rights to the property, will see his density allowance decreased dramatically if the draft R-4 specific plan is adopted by the city council.

The proposed specific plan will reduce density from 33 to 22 units. Density bonuses for low- and moderate-cost housing will be reduced from 11 to 6 units. Thus, the maximum density proposed is 28 units per acre.

The commission actually spent little time on the density question, but did have a lively conversation on whether to allow additional condominiums.

"There's certainly enough condominiums for those who choose to have them," Commissioner Tom Nash said.

NASH WAS referring to the completed

11-unit Chimneys project, which sits vacant, and the seven additional condominiums approved for the west side of Junipero Avenue between Fifth and Fourth avenues.

Nash called condominiums "not in the character of traditional Carmel" and added that the "only justification" for such units is "so we can provide for our own, so to speak."

Commissioner Gene Hammond agreed with Nash, saying he "very strongly endorsed" the concept of a ban on new condominiums.

Hammond said his principal objection is the cost of a condominium compared to renting an apartment.

"The city is clearly lacking in number of apartments," Hammond said. "I just feel very strongly that it should be apartments."

Commission Chairman Gene Cava was the only voice to support allowing additional condominium units in the R-4 zone.

Cava argued that "some smart developer" could design a project that will be profitable and offer moderate-cost housing.

To which Hammond replied, "The last thing I want is another smart developer in town."

Commissioner Ken White supported a condominium ban, saying apartments are more affordable for young people.

"My main point is there's an overbalance of condominiums. I think rentals are very crucial," White said.

Alan Williams, who developed the Chimneys and represents Handley's interests, said the costs of building apartments and condominiums are basically the same, so rents will not be low. "It's an economic problem," he said.

"I might agree with that if the balance in the city were equal," White replied.

With Cava dissenting, the commission reached a consensus to keep the condominium ban in the draft specific plan for public hearing.

The commission also easily agreed that the draft specific plan should include language to encourage maintenance of the gas station on the northeast corner of Junipero and Fourth avenues.

"The day is coming shortly when there will be only two stations in town," Nash said.

Hammond questioned whether the city could require the gas station to remain open and what obligations the city may have to assume. The query will be passed on to the city attorney for advice.

Williams also questioned that if the city deems a gas station in the R-4 district a "significant community resource" then perhaps the other gas stations in town should receive the same designation.

ALSO WITH very little discussion, the commission endorsed several proposed amendments to the general plan.

Some of the key provisions include:

- Allowing exactions from developers in return for approval of their projects. Ex-amples include street and drainage im-provements.

• Including policy P-1-4 in all commercial districts rather than just the central commercial zone. Policy P-1-4 gives the city the authority to restrict tourist-oriented business in the interests of the citizens' "health, safety and welfare."

• Requiring all visitor-oriented shops to be in the central commercial zone.

None of the decisions on the proposed R-4 specific plan and draft general plan amend-ments are final. The commission following the Feb. 19 public hearing could recommend approval to the city council, which is the ultimate authority for adoption of the specific plan and amendments to the general plan.

In a separate matter Jan. 29, the commis-sion received a brief overview of some preliminary data gathered by Denise Duffy and Associates for the master environmental assessment.

The survey included studies on business trends, current shops and hours of operation. In addition surveys were taken to determine where people parked and for how long, and where they live.

Most of the survey information was ob-tained over the Thanksgiving holiday.

"I don't think anything I'm going to say is going to surprise anybody," said consultant Denise Duffy.

Some of the key findings are:

- Delivery trucks account for 3 to 5 per-cent of the traffic in Carmel.
- Double-parking is a major concern and does affect traffic circulation.
- Average parking in the core area is one to two hours.
- The 20-minute spaces on Mission Street are not utilized effectively.
- Most people park one to two blocks from where they're going.
- Of the 200 parkers surveyed, 76 percent reside in Carmel.
- The number of restaurants, jewelry stores, art galleries and gift shops grew in the 1970s, but the numbers have leveled off since the 1980s.
- The numbers of hobby shops and dentist and physician offices have declined.

The survey continues next week when Angus McDonald and Associates conducts an analysis to determine what kinds of business would service Carmel if there were no tourists.

A final report on the results of all of the surveys is expected by early March.

How to spend lottery funds of $126,547?

How WILL the Carmel Unified School District spend its $126,547 in lot-tery funds?

That is the question before the board of education when it meets at 7 p.m. Tuesday, Feb. 11 in the Carmel Middle School library.

Supt. Robert Infelise reports that the first lottery installment is $126,547.

The proposed uses for those funds include staff salaries, curriculum development, books and materials, teacher training, and school bus replacement and maintenance.

Infelise said that since the funds will not even pay to replace one bus, trustees will have to determine how to spend the funds so the district gets "the biggest bang for its buck."

Planning commission faces light agenda

THE CARMEL Planning Commis-sion will face a light agenda at 4 p.m. Thursday, Feb. 13 in Carmel City Coun-cil chambers.

The commission will review a resubmittal of plans by architect Daryl Hawkins and owner Alan Fox for adding four apartments, including a 400 sq. ft. affordable unit, to the Oliver White Building on Dolores Street.

The commission must decide whether to require an environmental impact report on the project. Rather than demand that the project have an EIR, the commission asked Hawkins to resubmit more complete plans.

The decision on whether to require an EIR is the first step in the city process for building and use permits.

The commission was to review a resubmit-tal of plans for an exterior remodel of the Wermuth Building on Ocean Avenue, formerly the location of Sprouse-Reitz Vari-ety Store. Master lease holders Roxy Rapp and George Brook-Kothlow said they could not afford the remodel after the Carmel City Council determined that they would have to pay $120,000 in in-lieu fees for six parking spaces (see related story this issue.)

In other matters the commission will review:

• Chris Tescher and Dennis Levett's re-quest for a design study for a two-story home on Lincoln Street in the Gamble Estate.

• The land use committee recommenda-tion for denial of a use permit for Linda Fer-rari for a jewelry store on San Carlos Street. Ferrari can continue to operate as a non-conforming use.

Carmel man to fight Carmel Point subdivision

CHARLES CHRIETZBERG is not ready to abandon his fight to reduce the density and size of a proposed subdivision of eight 4,000 sq. ft. homes on Carmel Point.

Scenic Associates, a corporate name for four partners, wants to develop the approximately 39,000 sq. ft. parcel generally known as the Stewart property bordered by Scenic Road, and Ocean View and Isabelle avenues.

The property is a legal 1929 subdivision and partner Michael King, who owns four of the lots, said Scenic Associates will comply with all county and Coastal Commission ordinances.

But Chrietzberg, whose approximately 6,000 sq. ft. lot and home is on the northeastern border of the subdivision, is concerned about the development because of its height and density.

There also is the question of losing public parking across from a Coastal Commission-designated access at Carmel River Beach.

The Scenic Associates lots have been used for parking and with the development there will be no spaces available near the official coastal access, Chrietzberg contends.

Chrietzberg and his attorney, Michael Albov, will try to convince the county to make changes to the subdivision while it is in the process of adopting the implementing ordinances for the various land use plans in Monterey County.

A public workshop on those implementing ordinances will be from 9 a.m. until noon, Thursday, Feb. 6 at the courthouse in Monterey.

Then the board of supervisors will conduct a public hearing on the implementing ordinances at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday, Feb. 18 at the county courthouse in Salinas.

Chrietzberg hopes to use these hearings to get the county to alter the Stewart property subdivision.

Albov said implementing ordinances, since they are not site specific to certain areas, cannot effectively cover such diverse areas as Carmel and North Monterey County.

On the density question, Albov said the county can use the implementing ordinances to eliminate substandard lots, which would probably reduce the number of building sites on the Stewart property to six.

On the height limit, Albov said the county needs to ensure that the height is based on the original terrain of the land, rather than by grading that would increase the allowable height.

SCENIC ASSOCIATES plans to tier the homes so that each will have a view. For example, the back homes will match the county height limit, but grading work raising the land allows for views over the front units.

This work probably also will block Chrietzberg's views.

Albov also wants a mandatory design review by the county planning commission or supervisors.

In addition, Albov questions how the state or county will provide for public parking at the access point once the development starts.

Chrietzberg is not the only one concerned about the development. One of those questioning the project is Assemblyman Sam Farr of Carmel.

In a letter to the Coastal Commission, Farr wrote:

"Scenic Associates' application for development of lots on Scenic Road and Ocean View Avenue and Carmel Point raises several public policy concerns:

"Public parking opportunities will be lost...The state Coastal Conservancy and the state have gone to the expense to improve the access to the state beach directly across from this parcel.

The owners without protest have permitted a parking easement...and I believe it should remain a mini-parking lot to serve the coastal access policy.

"The proposed lot subdivision will have a major impact on traffic in the narrow and intensely used area. I believe the intent here is to squeeze too many structures on too small a land area thus exacerbating a public access issue.

"The heights of the eight homes will not be in keeping with the character of the neighborhood. You should not allow an increase in height because of a gain in elevation necessary for slope drainage requirements. The height of the structures should be diminished by any increase of the grade level.

"The city of Carmel is about to construct a public access and walkway project along the city's jurisdiction of Scenic Road. It is hoped that the county will continue the project along the unincorporated portion of Scenic Road.

"Authorization to build eight homes on a parcel that historically contained one home will preclude the county and the state developing adequate parking opportunities in this entire area.

"This project should be delayed until a suitable plan to accommodate public access has been worked out," Farr concluded.

Scenic Associates has a grading permit from the Coastal Commission but still must apply for a development permit from the county.

Ed Haber appointed to medical committee

Fifth District Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman has announced the appointment of Ed Haber of Carmel Valley to Monterey County's Emergency Medical Services Committee.

Haber, president of Quail Lodge and Carmel Valley Golf and Country Club, has been a resident of Carmel Valley for 38 years.

The Emergency Medical Care Committee reviews the ambulance services, emergency medical care and first aid practice in the county. This committee also serves to collect data on the use of emergency medical services, establish recommended standards for the delivery of emergency medical services and assist in the development of comprehensive plans for the establishment and operation of an emergency medical services system within the county.

Haber was instrumental in the formation of the Mid-Valley Fire Protection District and served on its board of directors as well as that of Community Hospital. He has also served as a long-time volunteer with the Monterey County Sheriff's Department.

Contributions will be added to an individual's tax to determine the proper balance due or refund due the taxpayer. Contributions will only be honored if payments are greater than the tax amount owed. In addition, contributions may only be made on the original tax return and once made, are irrevocable.

Last year more than 450,000 Californians contributed over $2.2 million to the various programs and funds.

One last (and wet) look at the AT&T Pro-Am

JACK NICKLAUS, here with son Jack Jr. looking on, was a gallery favorite, but failed to make the cut for the final round. (Holly McFarland photo.)

FUZZY ZOELLER took a commanding 5-stroke lead into the final round Monday, which was ruined out, making it a 54-hole tournament, and giving Zoeller a 5-stroke win over Payne Stewart. (Holly McFarland photo.)

ONE OF the biggest stories of the tournament, besides the weather, was actor (and amateur entrant) Clint Eastwood's announcement that he was running for mayor of Carmel, bringing a crush of national news media upon him throughout the tourney. (Holly McFarland photo.)

'I Was a Male Model' Hollywood next?

By MICHAEL GARDNER

I HAVE been patiently waiting by my phone each night, at times even contemplating buying one of those newfangled answering machines, even though I'm the type of person who usually hangs up when a "Hi, I'm not in right now..." comes on.

The reason for all of this apprehension is I anticipate a call any day now from Christie Brinkley, Steven Spielberg, or at least Burger King. After all, I may not be the Indiana Jones type and my name may be Mike, but I could pass for the Herb Burger King is desperately seeking.

You see, I have stars in my eyes. Like the little girl fresh off the Hollywood bus direct from Des Moines, I have a dream of stardom. What do Don Johnson, Burt Reynolds or Bill Cosby have that I don't?

Actually, I can blame Carolyn and Liz over at Elizabeth Modeling Agency for putting these thoughts of Cleos, Oscars and Emmys in my mind where before all I dreamed about was the Pulitzer.

It was innocent enough in the beginning, sort of like a gambler making his first crap shoot. No way would the star bug get me, I thought when Carolyn asked me to pop over to the Originators, a public relations and production company in Monterey.

With a pseudo-Joe Cool look I made my way in the elevator, stopping only at the restroom. I guess I was nervous despite having a smattering of theater background from my Father Drobney role in Don't Drink the Water on the MPC stage too long ago to mention the date.

Thankfully, Tom Soggin and his associate Greg Hyde are not your L.A. "Let's do lunch" types. Witty and casual, they made me feel relaxed.

Being from Carmel, they thought I would make a perfect looking tourist (don't tell that to the mayor!)

The client wanted a whale-watching commercial. The Originators, true to their name, came up with the idea where the roles are reversed. The whales would be watching the tourists. Toward the end one whale would say to the other "Let's have some fun," and immediately fluke, sending a splash of water on an unsuspecting tourist wearing Bermuda shorts and a Hawaiian shirt, with one of those cameras you get free with a paid subscription to Time hanging around his neck.

In the studio the tourist would be drenched by a bucket of water thrown by a sadistic stagehand.

Guess what role I was offered?

But in showbiz dreams come and go faster than you can say Cecil B. DeMille. The client rejected the concept and I was contemplating serious action. We're talking major depression and a bag of chocolate chip cookies seemed the only way out.

BUT THE gods of Hollywood certainly were smiling on this would-be actor because just a few weeks later the Originators called again with an offer I simply could not refuse.

Now, I'm the kind of guy who can go to Hawaii for a week and still be grabbed by sale-mad women fighting over sheets at Macy's White Flower Day.

But here I was being asked to star in a commercial for a suntan parlor called Salon de Soleil. The first question Tom asked was whether I had been working out. After managing to control the hysterical laughter, I explained to him that I lift weights 12 ounces at a time.

The job was mine.

At the initial interview I met another model, the kind of guy who appears in those "Men of" calendars or bun books. This my ego did not need.

Cast call was 9 a.m. I think I had said my one line 16,457 times before then. I was ready.

Always the early bird, I was one of the first to arrive. Great, I thought, two hunks and a beer belly. All my fantasies about meeting a model, falling in love and living off her $1,000-an-hour income went up in smoke the second these two guys took off their shirts.

By the time everyone had arrived and Tom and Greg had given us our final directions, it was 10 o'clock and my first hour as a model ended.

We were introduced to the operators, two of the nicest people you can ever meet, Lynn Gilbert and Woody Pearson, both of whom look as brown as George Hamilton in his heyday.

I was scheduled to be the first to go before the camera, hidden away in a small room toward the back. While waiting for the crew to set the tanning bed, which looks like the space travel bubble in 2010, I waited out in a hall clad only in beige trunks, white socks and red Bulldogs cap.

Suddenly, the realization hit that all my friends, the city council, school board and even Allen Funt may see me. I quickly did 15 situps, 12 pushups and several knee-bends in a last-minute bid to tighten the love handles. A hopeful glance in the mirror indicated failure and I seriously thought about coming down with a sudden appendicitis attack.

Of course it was only stage fright.

FROM DOWN the hallway Tom called out and I knew it was time. With the enthusiasm of a condemned man walking his last mile, I made my way down the hall, rehearsing my line as I drew closer and closer to the room.

Inside I confronted a maze of studio lights, several cameramen, Greg and Tom. They put me in the tanning facility and told me to relax. Relax, they say! How can I relax when I know I'll be seen throughout this area on MTV, CNN, KSBW, KMST and ESPN?

'I Was a Male Model'

I mean one minute there will be President Reagan talking about Libya and bam, commercial time and it's model Mike promoting the virtues of a suntan parlor.

George Plimpton may have made a fortune off participatory journalism, but I began to wonder if this really was my well of ink.

Yellow goggles were placed over my eyes for protection and we went through the paces, up on one elbow and saying the line. I asked if I should wiggle my toes and twiddle my thumbs. It seemed appropriate at the time.

The first few attempts at sitting up, not hitting the top of the tanning bed, and saying my line without looking and sounding like an idiot, went smoothly.

It's when the cameras rolled that I began to falter. First I was too slow. Then too fast. Then when I said the words correctly, my goggles would fall off.

Twice, after refocusing the camera, Tom said "go" and I didn't go, thinking it was a practice cue for the camera. My career in modeling did not look bright.

Finally, after about a dozen takes, I got it right. In living color I sit up, tell people to "Give me a break, it's my first time" and smile in three and one-half seconds. And the yellow goggles didn't fall off.

Time to relax while the other models posed in the tanning bed for the commercial and still shots by photographer Bob Western for newspaper ads. It was obvious they didn't want me gracing Monterey Life so I went down to the local health food store, swearing I'd lose weight by the time my filming begins again.

The worst part about modeling is the waiting. If I were a smoker, two packs would have been gone before my makeup call was ready. Then, I went and soiled $25 white tennis shorts with the makeup.

Finally, four hours after my first shoot, it's time for the wrap shot. And my hard work is rewarded.

MY "JOB," if you can call it that, was to walk out with four beautiful women on my arms.

It was a subtle hint that those with brown skin, even those of us who are overweight, can go home with a beautiful girl as long as he has a healthy tan.

Seeing as how I don't exactly have four girls on my arm every day, I can understand their point.

All we had to do was walk past the camera looking happy. The camera pans as we exit and then the two hunks lower their sunglasses and say "unbelievable."

Too easy and too quick, I moan, seeing as how it's not everyday I have four beautiful women on my arms.

I contemplated paying one of the guys to blow his lines several times, but then figured that would be too obvious.

I went into character — sort of a cross between Rodney Dangerfield and John Madden and we were ready.

The first few times the two guys cut out of character too quick and we had to do it over and over and over and over again. Thank you, Lord, I thought to myself.

Then about three times in a row one of the women, obviously infatuated by me, tripped

Pro golfer co-designed

Watson touts new Spanish Bay linksland

WHEN TOM Watson first played a links golf course in Scotland he described the unusual sand dunes links as "Mickey Mouse."

Today, Watson is one of the designers of what Pebble Beach Co. likes to bill as the only authentic linksland course in the United States.

Watson, Sandy Tatum and Robert Trent Jones have been contracted by Pebble Beach Co. to design and oversee development of the Spanish Bay golf course, which will closely parallel the links-style play of St. Andrews.

The course currently is under construction as part of the Spanish Bay hotel and condominium development in northwestern Del Monte Forest.

With the lure of a luncheon and interviews with Watson, the news media covering the AT&T Pebble Beach National Pro-Am (formerly the Crosby) last week descended on a press conference called by Pebble Beach Co. President Tom Oliver to espouse the virtues of the Spanish Bay course.

What makes a linksland course so unusual is its numerous holes in the sand dunes where shots must lie low lest they be taken off course by the high winds.

Watson, one of the most colorful and successful players on the tour with U.S. Open, British Open and Bing Crosby National Pro-Am trophies on the mantle, described his "love affair" with the linksland course.

Watson said he "couldn't believe it" when Robert Trent Jones called him one day to inquire about a joint venture for Spanish Bay. "I don't know anything about architecture. I'm just a golfer," Watson said he told Jones.

Watson explained that when he first played a linksland course in Scotland he thought it was "Mickey Mouse...I didn't like it."

"I'll never understand St. Andrews. It's the kind of golf course you don't get close to," said Watson.

Asked his predicted score at Spanish Bay, Watson said, "You don't know what you're going to shoot. If you have enough guts and conditions are right you can go for it."

Watson said he would someday like to see a major tournament played at Spanish Bay. "I would certainly hope so. I hope the course is worthy of the U.S. Open or PGA," he said.

Watson said he had two dreams. One was to win the U.S. Open, which he did at Pebble Beach in 1982 thanks to a spectacular shot on the 17th, and the "other dream is happening right now" — to build a linksland course in the United States.

WATSON SAID it was important to have the course here because "when one thinks of golf they're thinking of Pebble Beach and St. Andrews."

Robert Trent Jones, a noted golf course architect, said the course will be "low lying" because of the winds that sometimes reach 20 mph. Because of the layout, golfers will have to keep the ball low on the ground "like a rabbit running to the hole."

He said if the wind is not too high and the course is running fast there will be good under-par scores. But on days when the opposite is true, golfers will have to "be inventive" to shoot good scores.

The weather, he said, is "like a lion one day and a lamb the next."

Jones too agrees with the location. "It's the last true authentic sand dunes links opportunity in America."

The 6,870-yard course will play to a par 72 over about 130 acres that wraps around the resort. The players will not approach the clubhouse until the full 18-hole round is completed.

Only one hole, the 425-yard, par-4 17th runs across the ocean and entices golfers to duff their golfballs into the sea.

Holes seven, eight and nine are on the opposite side of 17-Mile Drive, connected with the rest of the course by a tunnel.

The dunes will encompass the front nine and golfers will not get a break until 10-13, which will have the most resemblance to a "normal course."

Monterey Peninsula Country Club holes nine and ten most resemble the linksland style of play.

The company also is restoring the dunes and there will be two environmentally-protected areas along the course.

And fescue grass from Scotland will be imported to landscape the dunes.

Oliver predicts that the Spanish Bay course will open in fall 1987.

Grunion Run property once again enters escrow

THE FORMER Grunion Run restaurant, whose fate has been a subject of controversy for the city, has once again entered into escrow.

Attorney and Carmel resident Robert d'Isidoro is in the process of purchasing the three lots with a restaurant building, on the south side of Fourth Avenue between Mission and San Carlos Streets. It is a part of the Doud Estate and appraised at $960,000. It has been on the market for three years.

Escrow is scheduled to close Feb. 13, d'Isidoro said. He plans to build a mix of apartments and offices on the site and will submit plans as soon as possible.

The Carmel City Council had considered purchasing the property last year after Sam Garzone decided not to renew an option he had to buy the property. Garzone gave up his option after it appeared he would be required by Carmel Board of Adjustments to do a full-scale environmental impact report on his plans for 10 condominiums and two apartments at the site.

The city council abandoned its plans to buy it after it decided there were other projects that needed to be completed before considering purchasing the property. Councilwoman Helen Arnold had proposed that if the city bought the property, it could turn it into a parking area, but her suggestion had met with opposition from other council members.

New timeline for dam election to be reviewed

By NANCY HILLS

A REVISED timeline for an election on the proposed San Clemente dam for November 1987 will be reviewed by Monterey Peninsula Water Management District board at its February meeting.

The water board will meet 7:30 p.m., Monday, Feb. 10 in Monterey City Council chambers.

Bruce Buel, general manager of the water district, said that scheduling the election for November so it coincides with the regular election will save the district approximately $30,000.

Until last December, a special election was planned for March 1987. Problems with a computer model of the dam forced a delay in the completion of its Environmental Impact Report required by the California Environmental Quality Act.

A part of that computer model should be ready this month and a special water board meeting at 2 p.m., Thursday, Feb. 27 in the Monterey County Health Department meeting room is planned to size the dam for the EIR.

The water board will discuss at its Feb. 10 meeting how involved it wants to get in the process of putting together the finished EIR, Buel explained.

"They could just say (to the district staff) 'bring us the finished product,' but I think this particular board won't want to do that," he added.

Buel said that a draft of the EIR should be ready in July. He hopes to have a certified EIR finished in December of this year. The district wants to get on the state Water Resources Board agenda, a part of the state water rights process, by February 1987.

If the election is to be conducted in November, the district needs to "call" for it in August of the same year, Buel said.

The water board will also discuss the effects and trade-offs different dam sizes will have on such factors as the environment, cost of the dam, voter acceptance, and water shortage during a drought. The larger the dam the greater the financial cost and impact on the environment. The smaller the dam, the greater risk there is of a water shortage during a drought. The discussion is in preparation of the special Feb. 27 meeting.

The largest dam the board is currently discussing would contain 29,000 ac. ft. of water. Should the board decide that it needs a larger dam, the district would have to reapply to the state water board, which could entail a significant delay in bringing the dam to a vote.

Also on the agenda is a Schulte Reach Erosion Control Project along the Carmel River.

"We are proposing a vegetation planting starting in March, adjacent and up from the bridge. Ultimately, we have four phases to the project, including planting vegetation (in two phases,) irrigation, and structural work," Buel said.

According to the staff report, the irrigation phase would consist of a drip system supplied by a shallow well to be drilled on either the upper or lower terrace of Shulte Reach. Structural work could begin in mid-summer and is intended to shift the channel slightly to the south.

In addition, this meeting will begin the presentation by jurisdictions within the water district their priority systems for water distribution and allocations.

The jurisdictions are scheduled to present their plans to the board in alphabetical order, three jurisdictions per meeting. Carmel, Del Rey Oaks and Monterey will present programs in the Feb. 10 meeting.

With the possibility of additional water becoming available through the proposed dam and/or reclamation of water, how the jurisdictions allocate additional water has become a subject of controversy for the water board.

Some board members, particularly Dick Heuer, have suggested that the water district phase the additional water rather than give it to the jurisdictions all at once. Heuer has expressed concern that the additional water from the dam will be used up long before the year 2020, the year the dam is supposed to take the peninsula to.

Meadow residents halt CSD construction

By NANCY HILLS

WATCHING FOR something new on the horizon is an activity most people indulge in, both literally and figuratively.

When Robbin Torrey looked out over the horizon from her home in Carmel Meadows about three months ago, she not only didn't like what she saw, she was quite surprised.

Carmel Sanitary District had begun construction on a new pump station in the viewshed of her house on Ribera Road, overlooking a portion of Carmel River Beach.

Torrey took action, calling CSD and contacting the California Coastal Commission. Construction was ordered halted Jan. 31 by the Coastal Commission until it can make a determination on CSD building permits for the structure.

Torrey wants CSD to put the pump station underground and completely out of sight.

Michael Zambory, general manager of CSD, said that is financially unfeasible to put it underground but the district is willing to have it landscaped to camouflage the building. CSD had already commissioned plans by a landscape artist, Zambory said.

The stop work order brings to a halt a $6 million improvement program that has been ongoing for two years, said Zambory.

The completed pump building, according to Zambory, will be 4 feet by 8 feet and 8 feet in height. It will house a pump, back-up pump for Carmel Meadows and electrical alarm and telemetry board for stations down the coast. The board relays energy to sewage pump stations in case of a Pacific Gas and Electric power failure. It replaces a much smaller pump station building that had been located on the site.

"It looks like an oversized outhouse," Torrey complained.

She added that neither she nor any of her neighbors were notified of the planned construction, or allowed to have input at any meetings. The building, she added, can be seen from the state beach. She contends that CSD does not have the necessary permits to build the station.

Zambory claims that the permit for the Ribera Road pump station is included in the general permit for the sanitation department improvements. The building was the last physical structure that needed to be built in the project, he said.

The stoppage, he said, is costing the district money.

CSD has easement permits from the state park to lay pipeline, Torrey said, but added she was told it did not have a permit to build the pump station. The station is located on state land.

Les Strnad, chief of permits for the Coastal Commission, said he has asked Zambory for proof of permits on the building, but the CSD general manager has not provided them as of Jan. 30. Strnad said that the building meets many of the requirements of a structure that needs a permit from the Coastal Commission.

"It is on the coastline, visible from a state beach and has an impact on the scenic surroundings," Strnad said.

It is possible the permit could be an amendment to the existing project permit.

The project could be delayed a couple of months at least, depending on the amount of protests involved.

"They just don't want to change to underground because they have all ready started construction," Torrey said. "If they had planned to put it underground to begin with, it would be fine."

The project, Zambory said, is being paid for with state and federal funds. He could not have received the money from those agencies to put the pump station underground only in order to preserve the view of a couple of houses, even before construction was started, he added. Particularly since the pump is for Carmel Meadows only, he added.

The cost to put it underground now would be approximately $75,000 to $100,000, Zambory said.

"If Carmel Meadows wants to form an assessment district to pay for that, why, that's fine. But I cannot ask the entire district to foot the bill for their view. As a manager, that is just not cost effective and unfair," he said.

Since the district is willing to put a few thousand dollars into landscaping, Zambory feels Torrey is being unfair.

"I went out there the day she called," he said. "We hired a landscape architect right away."

The landscaping plans include burying the brick structure at least four feet and lattice work with planting on the rest, Zambory said.

Torrey said landscaping was not feasible for the low brush area where the pump station is located.

Torrey's lawyer and neighbor, Charles Keller, said that he feels they just want CSD to follow the rules. He is disturbed that there is no permit for the building and no one in the neighborhood was contacted about the upcoming project.

In a letter to Strnad, Keller wrote that "...it appears clear that the district was proceeding without the benefit of a hearing or permit and as a consequence the staff, the commission, and the members of the public have been deprived of the opportunity to provide input into the proposed building..."

Construction of the pump station continues to be suspended while the Coastal Commission investigates the permits.

Fifth District Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman said her office is looking into the problem, but it apparently falls in a jurisdictional "gray area."

"It bothers me that there is such a gray area at all," Strasser Kauffman said.

In the meantime, Torrey continues to look out over her horizon, and waits.

Unfortunately, number 13 was the women's lucky number and we got it right. My 15 minutes of fame, as Andy Warhol says, was over.

My days now are filled with hope that the intercom signaling a call for me will be from Ford or Elite out of New York. Instead, it's Doug Schmitz or some little old lady wanting us to cover an afternoon tea.

Poor Carolyn and Liz are also tired of me asking about my next assignment, which in their opinion probably should be on location in Outer Mongolia.

Old friends obviously wanting to get on the bandwagon early have called, wanting to be everything from my PR man to photographer to makeup artist.

I promise I won't forget the little people. Then there's the folks like my brother, you know, the jealous sort, who called the Screen Actors Guild to get me thrown out for an incompetent performance.

To him and the rest of my detractors, I say "Gimme a break, it was my first time!"

CHALK MARKS

Message from the principal

By JOE FELDEISEN

Carmel High School principal

Carmel High School students have finished their semester exams, and the report cards will be in the mail the first week of February.

For as long as the schools have existed, there have been methods for reporting to parents the progress their children make in school. Many different methods are used, but all of them involve assigning a mark that indicates a level of progress. Carmel High uses an "A B C D F" reporting system. Other schools use a check mark, a simple pass/fail mark, or an "S" for satisfactory or a "U" for unsatisfactory. All these methods were designed to help parents understand clearly the progress their children are making in school.

In deciding upon a student's grade, a teacher considers many objective factors. These include the grading standards that the school and teacher have established, the abilities of all students in the class, the achievement of a student in relation to his or her identified abilities, the expectations the teacher has for the particular class, and the progress a student makes in a given reporting period.

As you are reading these words, the students at Carmel High School are starting a new semester of work. It is very important that the student and his/her parents understand the grading system used by teachers. As the second semester progresses, and you have questions concerning the grading procedures of your student's teachers, please do not hesitate to call the teachers. Better communication between the school and the home can only benefit the student.

The Monterey County Science and Engineering Fair will be held at the Monterey County Fairgrounds April 12-14. Student contestants may enter one exhibit. The deadline to enter is March 1. The purpose of the fair is to stimulate in young people an active interest in science and engineering, to provide an educational experience, and to give public recognition to talented students for work they have done.

Congratulations are in order to the students, faculty and parents of Carmel High School. Once again, Carmel High has been identified as one of the top 100 high schools in the State of California. This achievement was determined by the California Assessment Program tests which are administered each year to the senior class by the State of California. If you would like more information about these scores, please feel free to call my office.

MCSPCA ANNOUNCES CHANGE IN PROGRAM

Merv Griffin, originally scheduled as the guest speaker for the annual meeting of the Monterey County Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, will not be available to attend the event as planned.

The meeting, to be held at the Hyatt Regency in Monterey at noon Feb. 8, will feature guest speaker Carmelita Pope, director of the Hollywood office of The American Humane Association.

Pope is widely acclaimed as one of the most knowledgeable experts in the country on the psychology of pet ownership and pet owner education. Pope has also been an actress since the age of five, starring on Broadway and earning scores of motion picture and TV credits.

Today she is involved with motion picture and television productions, reading scripts, consulting with producers, advising the entertainment industry on their use of animals and assigning the field staff to supervise the animal action.

As the executive producer of The American Humane Association's annual PATSY (Performing Animal Top Star of the Year) Award Show, she has set up a production company to tape and syndicate the show.

At home, she spends her time with MacDougal, a West Highland Terrier and with Patsy, a Scottie (found as a stray the week of the PATSY Award Show).

FREMIER, BRENNER OPENING SEES HUGE CROWDS

More than 650 people, the largest crowd the Pacific Grove Art Center has seen in some time, packed the art center in downtown Pacific Grove for Roger Premier and Jean Wilsdon-Brenner's shows, "Monterey Peninsula: A Visual Memory," and "Monterey County: A Personal View," respectively, both under the overall title, "Monterey County: Two Views."

The time Premier, who is the head of the photographic department at Monterey Peninsula College and has exhibited extensively on the peninsula, spent on his project is evident in his multiple-exposure image of a Saturday afternoon football game at Carmel High School. He shot 462 frames before he was satisfied.

By the same token Brenner's works often begin with an arduous hike into the county's backcountry where she "scouts" locations and takes snapshots that will eventually be used as models for her "dimensional paintings." The huge paintings are put together arduously, much like an immense jigsaw puzzle.

Fremer and Brenner's shows can be viewed through March 8, from 12 noon to 5 p.m., Tuesdays through Saturdays at the Pacific Grove Art Center, near corner of Forest and Lighthouse.

DAR GENEALOGICAL SEMINAR

The members of the Commodore Sloat Chapter of the National Society of the Daughters of the American Revolution are certainly outdoing themselves these days. Not only have they just finished the estimable Good Citizen Awards to outstanding students of each peninsula senior high school class but they are offering from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Saturday, Feb. 8 the opportunity for the public to participate in an extensive Genealogical Seminar.

For the fifth consecutive year, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Rubin King this year, the chapter will sponsor a seminar to assist in genealogical research. A special guest speaker, Mr. Jay Roberts from Salt Lake City, will attend. He is the senior reference consultant in the American Reference Unit at the Genealogical Library in Salt Lake City, the largest in the world. There will be beginner and advanced workshops and a panel to answer questions seminar participants may have on their own research.

The event will be held at the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter-day Saints, Noche Buena and Plumas, Seaside. There is a $3 fee, but no reservations are required. Bring a bag lunch. Further information call Mrs. Rubin H. Konig, 375-7415 or Mrs. William Gooley, Regent, at 372-7492.

BRADLEY TO SPEAK AT FARR FUNDRAISER

Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley will be the featured speaker at a fund-raising dinner for Assemblyman Sam Farr at 7:30 p.m. at the Hyatt Regency Monterey Friday, Feb. 7.

Persons interested in attending Farr's event may obtain additional information by contacting Becky Allen at 624-4407.

Bradley will address the dinner crowd concerning issues facing California, including the effects of potential offshore oil and gas drilling along the California coast.

The dinner will begin at 7:30 p.m., following at 6:30 p.m. reception at the hotel banquet facility.

Rainy weather hits Carmel with a vengeance

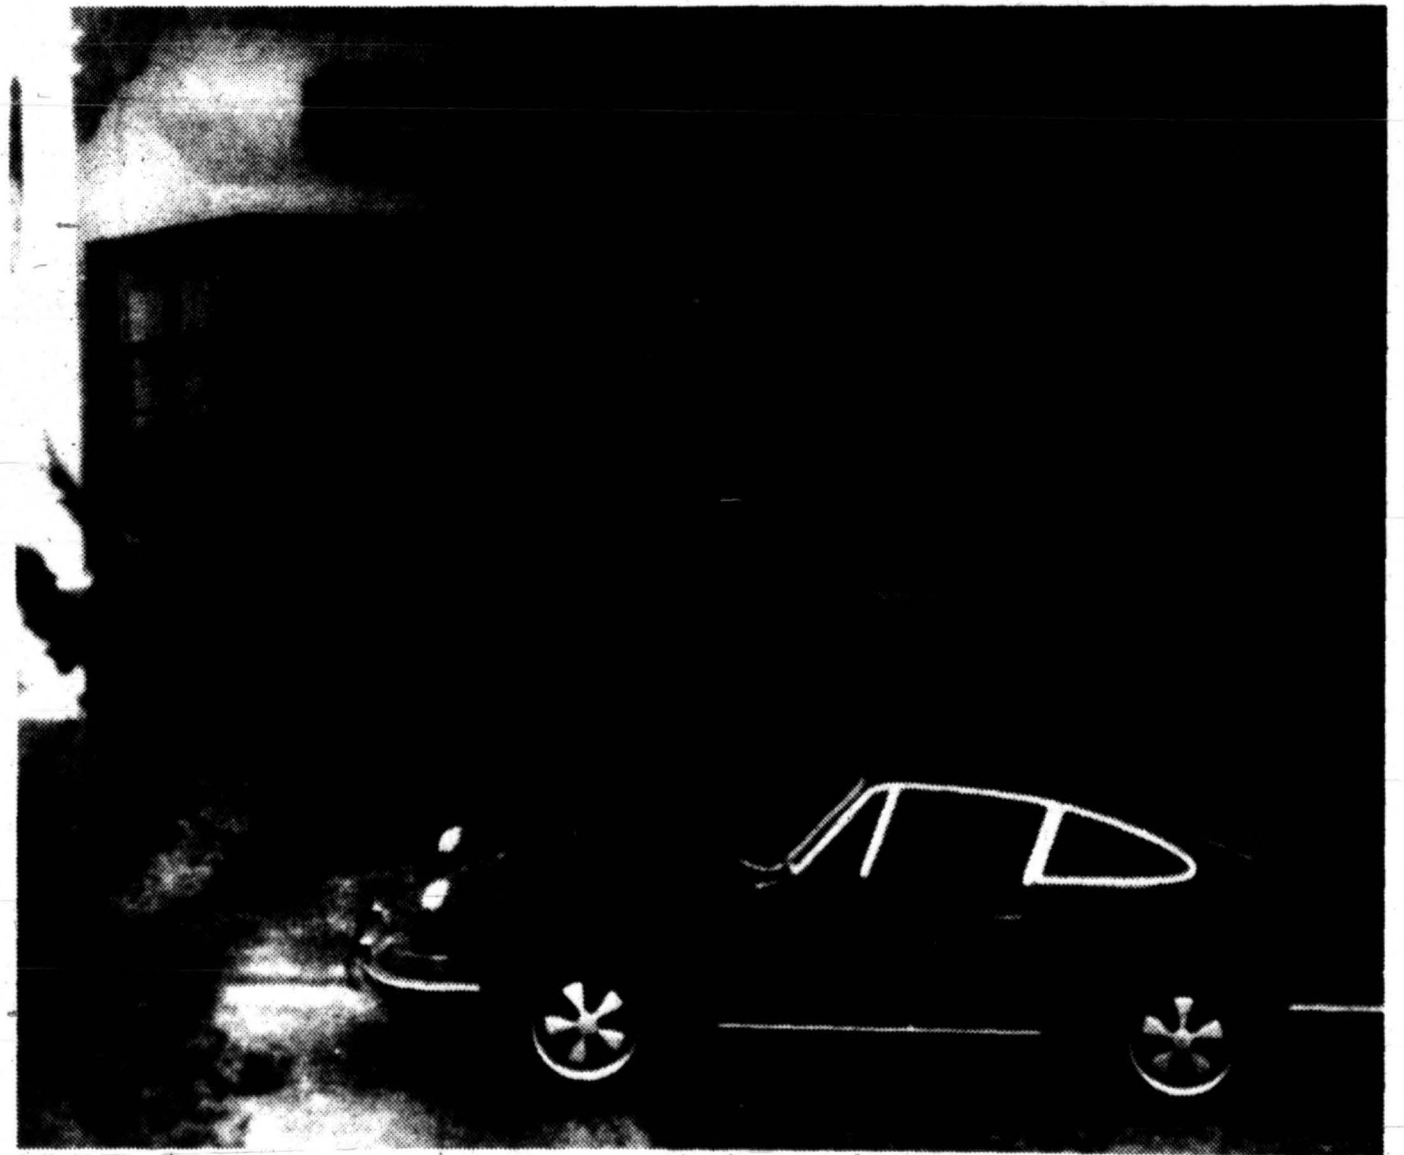

A MAN braves the elements, in the process getting his feet soaked, as the sidewalk at the corner of San Carlos and Ocean gets flooded over during Monday's torrential rains. (Michael Gardner photo.)

METEOROLOGICAL PHENOMENA

On Wednesday, Jan. 25, at 10:30 p.m., a rainbow with one point resting on Point Carmel, was witnessed by two reputable Carmelenos. With the Volstead Act in full force here, full credence must be given to the statement. We know of no reason why the refraction of the moon's rays falling on watery particles in the heavens should not mirror a rainbow. To the unique scenery of Carmel Bay must be added lunar rainbows.

ELECTION ON FIREHOUSE BOND ISSUE CHANGED

The firehouse bond election has been postponed one week until March 3. The ordinance calling the election, scheduled for second reading at the council meeting Wednesday evening, was instead amended and given first reading in the amended form. March 3 is the earliest possible date for the election, following publication of the ordinance.

LEACH ASKS TO REPLACE OAK WITH FLOWERING PLUM

Most exotic item on the February tree tour which leaves city hall at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon:

Rupert Leach has asked council approval for replacing the oak tree in front of his Bib 'n Tucker on Ocean Avenue with a flowering plum.

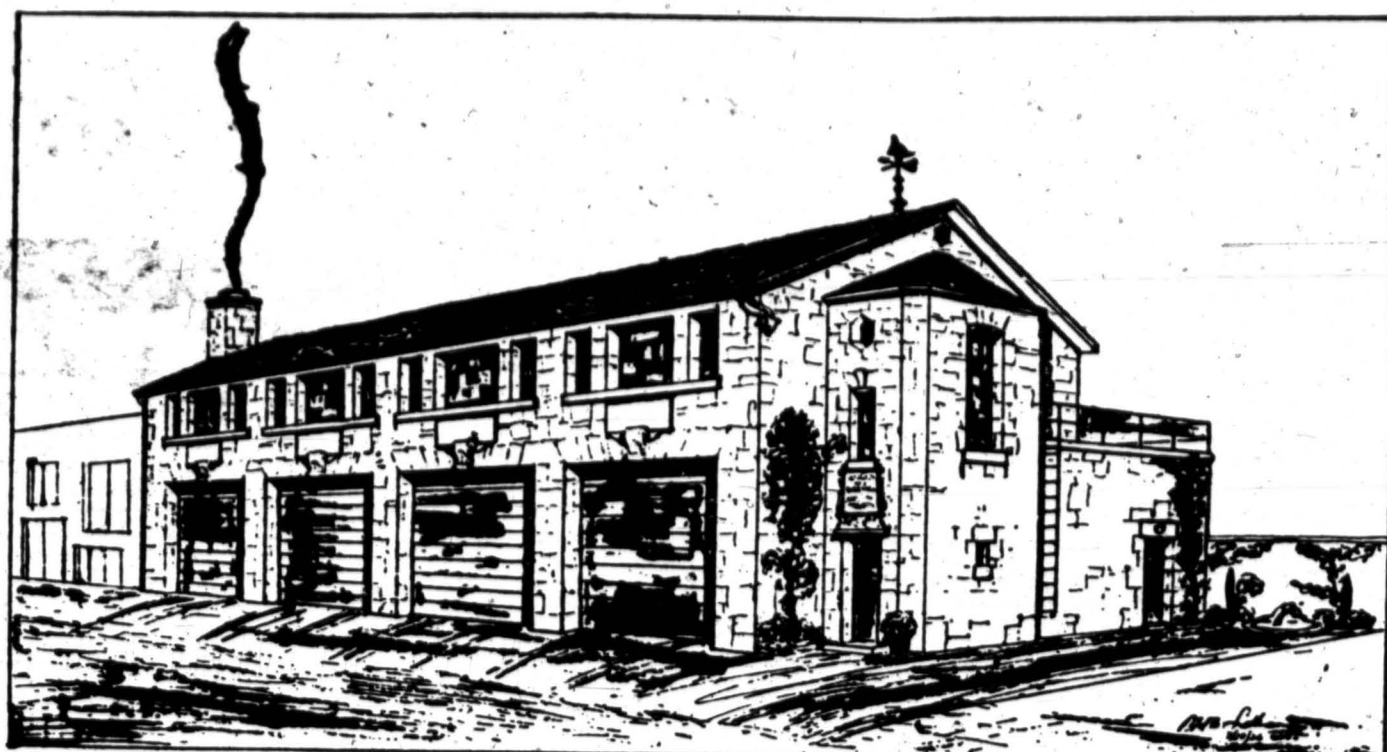

Mrs. W.E. Pulliam wants to trim the acacia trees at Casanova and Eighth. The council will look at the "declining" cypress on Del Mar Avenue. They will consider Lucile Nelson's request to apply oil and screening to reduce nuisance occasioned by cars turning around on the dead end of Casanova Street, and Charles A. Watson wants handrails on the approach to the Lincoln and Fourth Avenue footbridge.

BAY SCHOOL PROJECT CLEARED

A suit seeking a permanent injunction

'PROPOSED NEW Firehouse For Carmel' was the headline in this issue of the Carmel Pine Cone of Feb. 7, 1936, in which the city sought $12,000 to build a firehouse ($3,800 for the land and $8,200 for construction costs!). The firehouse is still being used and is located on Sixth Avenue between Mission and San Carlos.

against the rebuilding of Bay School was dismissed last week and the school board is currently seeking bids for the reconstruction and possible demolition of the building.

The school board may not have to move ahead with demolition of the Bay School building if some group or individual accepts the board's offer to remove the building from its present site for historical purposes.

THE MEDFLY IS HEADED OUR WAY

The chances that Monterey County will become infested with the Mediterranean fruit fly — a scourge of fruit and vegetables — are "very likely," according to Richard Nutter, county agricultural commissioner.

"I'd say the chances are we'll have them unless the eradication program in Santa Clara and Alameda counties is effective," Nutter said in an interview. "I have every reason to believe we'll have them have."

The fruit pest was detected in the two other counties and has resulted in a massive, community-supported house-to-house eradication effort.

Recovery resistance discussed

Cypress Inn in escrow

ELEGANT, older inns owned by Carroll McKee are quite the thing these days. They certainly don't stay on the market long.

McKee's most recent sale is the 33-room Cypress Inn on Lincoln Street and Seventh Avenue, one of those gracious hostels built in the 1920s. Local realtors Ben Heinrich, Douglas Dusenbery and Richard Albers of Heinrich, Dusenbery & Albers at 200 Clock Tower Place presently have the inn in escrow, due to close in mid-April, for approximately $4 million. The sale includes a small parking lot down the street.

Ben Heinrich said they were all very proud to be a part of the purchase. The hotel, he added, "has a magical quality. It's been such a gracious inn for so many, many years."

Any changes they make will be minor, Heinrich said, such as redecorating the rooms. The parking lot will remain a parking lot.

The Cypress Inn sold shortly after its more famous counterpart, Pine Inn — another of McKee's holdings — which changed hands in December 1985. It sold for approximately $10 million.

IT'S THAT INSTALLATION TIME

Right after the onslaught of December holiday rituals, comes another time-honored tradition — installation of new board officers. It's that time of the year again, the way many of us know for certain the new year has begun.

Carmel Valley Chamber of Commerce installed Sal Nicita of S. J. Nicita Accountancy Corp., 26356 Carmel Rancho Lane, in January as the new president of the chamber. Nicita took over the duties from Lois Lamar, who apparently chose not to seek re-election.

Jo Lomanto, manager of Carmel Valley branch of Bank of America, was installed as first vice president and Paul Brocchini, owner of the Pewter Shop in the Barnyard, as second vice president.

Kim Hartford, O.D., was installed for a second term as secretary and Judy Caswell, owner/operator of JCS Word Processing, for her second term as treasurer.

The chamber also gave out its Good Egg awards to members who former Good Eggs have voted as having performed outstanding service to the community. This year's recipients of the award were Phyllis Crockett and the first couple to win, Novella and Aloys Nicholson.

The Professional Woman's Network also participated in the annual ceremonies with a dinner of its own. Former president Candace Snow, owner/operator of Data Base in Carmel Valley Village, turned over network presidential reins to attorney Elizabeth Field. Carol McDonald was installed as vice president, treasurer is Leslie Simon and secretary Grace Darcy.

Fifth District Supervisor Karin Strasser Kauffman received the Professional Woman of the Year award and attendees at the dinner got to hear the inside scoop on being a successful actress from speaker Joan Fontaine.

Coming up is Carmel Business Association installation dinner/dance, no-host cocktails at 6:30 p.m. and dinner starting at 7:30 p.m. Feb. 15 at Monterey Peninsula Country Club.

Dinner tickets are $22.50 per person and reservations are required. Music for dancing will be provided by the Dave Clay combo.

TIDBITS

Ballena Bay Pewtersmiths closed its doors in January in The Mall on San Carlos Street. Poking around, I have heard that the landlady is trying to charge as much in rent for the spaces in The Mall as are charged at Cottage Row across the street. Currently, there are two empty spaces in the little complex.

Long-time jeweler and watch repairman Kenneth Matthew had received a business license to set up shop on Dolores Street but found the overhead so high that he didn't want hassle with the stress. So, no watch repair business. Matthews, who is in his 80s, had a jewelry business in Carmel about four years ago, I understand.

Cosmotologist Joyce Porter has rented space in March Hare beauty salon on the corner of Mission Street and Fifth Avenue.

There's a new accounting office upstairs in Lincoln Lane (same courtyard where Sans Souci restaurant is located.) Steven J. Sanders, Inc. is located where the Fellowship of the Crown used to be. It's listed as a "central accounting office" and is a one- to two-person office.

Julian Bills has purchased Rosita Lodge on the corner of Torres Street and Fourth Avenue. The nine-unit lodge is managed by "Bud" and Ellen Eastwood.

Bills also owns, in limited partnerships, Forest Lodge and Green Lantern Inn in Carmel, Stagecoach and Pelican Inn in Monterey and Sunset Motel in Pacific Grove. He also is a part of Monterey Motel Brokerage.

And last but not least: My nomination for a CHUTZPAH AWARD has got to go to Paul Laub, currently a Carmel-by-the-Sea mayoral candidate.

Though there are many reasons to nominate this never-at-a-loss entrepreneur for the chutzpah, his newest campaign promotion is truly a rare moment in the democratic process and free enterprise system.

Contrary to popular rumor — at the time I'm writing this — Laub is NOT selling "Clint for Mayor" T-shirts. He is selling "Laub for Mayor" T-shirts at Laub's Country Store, discretely located on the corner of Ocean Avenue and San

AFTER THE golf tournament is over, we're all a little stressed. Christine Kollach, owner of Cheppu, a new shop behind Em Le's on Dolores Street, appears to have weathered the onslaught of bad weather and tourists, but her companion looks a little teed-off. All dressed up and then it had to rain. Oh well. Cheppu sells clothing and other artifacts from the Himalayas, where Kollach lived for 12 years. Her date? A dance mask from Nepal. (Nancy Hills photo.)

Carlos Street. When you purchase a "Go To Bat for Laub" T-shirt, he will give you — this man is nothing if not fair! — a "Make My Day, Clint Eastwood for Mayor" T-shirt absolutely free! Now, how many people do you know that would be willing to help out an opponent like that?

Give me liberty or give me travelers' checks.

QUALLS NEW ASSOCIATE

Patricia Qualls has announced that Thomas J. Smith has joined Patricia A. Qualls & Associates, a financial consulting firm at 200 Clock Tower Place, as an associate.

Smith, according to information from Qualls & Associates, has earned masters of science, financial planning, and a masters of business administration in international business degrees. Smith was a nominee of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce for 1985 Small Business of the Year Award.

Smith, his wife Diana and infant son, Jay, recently relocated from San Francisco to the peninsula to join Patricia A. Qualls & Associates.

A SPECIAL REQUEST

Because of popular demand by both readers and friends, I'm happy to do a little write-up that mentions the Swiss Tavern, upstairs in the Su Vecino Court (where Bud's Pub is located) on Lincoln Street.

Heinz Fanderl, chef and owner of the restaurant, has won the 1985 Chef of the Year award from the Monterey Peninsula Chefs' Association. Fanderl also won the award in 1978.

The award is mainly for work in the association, Fanderl said, which is a professional organization of about 100 peninsula chefs.

Beside their social activities, the chefs participate in fundraising functions such as the recent March of Dimes gala at the Monterey Sheraton, African relief fund raisers and Alliance on Aging projects, Fanderl explained.

Fanderl fits in his work with the association between his duties as chef at the restaurant he and his wife, Inge, have owned for 11 years. Inge runs business up front in the Swiss Tavern while Heinz does his in the kitchen.

Fanderl's menu specializes in European Swiss food, with the emphasis on veal dishes. Fanderl believes that it is the only place in town that serves cheese and beef fondues.

SOMETHING I HAVE TO DO

I have to do this because I said I would and I'm sure she didn't believe me.

HI, VICTORIA! HOW'RE THINGS?

Now, everyone who sees Victoria Andrews, intrepid Carmel Valley resident, just in case she doesn't read my column — though we know that isn't possible — can tell her that I said hello. She'll probably kill me, but what-the-hey, live dangerously.

SISTER CITY

Charles Popelka of Carmel Mission Cleaners lent me this little ditty that he saw in the San Francisco Chronicle.

"The people in Portofino along the Italian Riviera can't even paint a shutter on a window without showing sample of the proposed new paint to the city council for approval."

My word, imagine that.

BECAUSE IT'S HERE

I continue to cherish the idea that someday my little feet will hit the trail again and I'll treat my senses to the sights, sounds and sensations of far and distant lands. It will be some time, though, before anything like that will happen.

The perfect way to say... Be My Valentine!

One of the places I would definitely like to treat myself to is the Himalayas. However, in the best tradition of mountains and Mohammed, a little bit of that area is coming to Carmel — and right up the street from me.

Christine Kolisch has opened her shop, Cheppu, on Dolores Street between Fifth and Sixth avenues. It is located in the former Nell's Plum Tree space in the courtyard where Em Le's is. She closed her shop in Monterey Jan. 30 and reopened in Carmel this week.

Cheppu has started by carrying clothes and accessories from the Nepal and Tibet. She hopes to amend her use permit to include artifacts and rugs from that area. She is using some for display — not for sale — in the shop until then.

The items she sells in her shop should bring back many memories for Kolisch, who spent more than 12 years in Nepal and before that a year in Afghanistan. It was one of those places she ended up after taking those trips in which you drive from Amsterdam to the rest of the world — you know, the trip many young college students talk about doing. While in Nepal, she said she owned and operated a gallery of Tibetan and Nepalese wood block prints and photographs of the Himalayas. She said she represented 10 photographers, including herself.

The clothing includes hand-loomed jackets, painted silk dresses, pants and tops. She will have antique silk robes, which are rather like kimonos but elaborate with "lots of volume (materials) and intricate silk brocade."

She has Ladakhi coats from the Ladakh area known as "little Tibet." She will also carry distinctive, Tibetan fox fur hats, hand-printed scarves and pashmina (cashmere) shawls and mufflers. For fashion accessories, she will have such everyday items as yak bone belt, textiles from Bhutan, silk purses called tailis and antique jewelry.

If she is allowed, Kolisch said she will sell hand-knotted pure woolen Himalayan rugs — the real ones, she added, not those made for tourists.

The shop won't be Kolisch's only interest. She not only brought back clothing and artifacts, but also a knowledge of yoga, which she will be teaching here on the peninsula. Kolisch said she probably will also be leading groups back to Nepal, and will visit there a couple of times a year at least. Maybe I can hitch a ride on a yak bone belt.

agency has been doing well — so well, in fact, they have opened a separate modeling school.

The classes are divided into age groups, a six-week session for 12- to 14-year olds and an eight-week set of courses for 15-year olds and up.

The classes, Goodall said, are designed to "teach the basics of modeling and to help the student reach her full potential as a woman of the 80s."

Students start right away on "ramp work" so they can get enough practice of the difficult model's walk they have to master, Goodall said.

The look that the school emphasizes in its teaching, Brown said, is a "classic" look, nothing "too far out." What the student learns in the classes on make-up, hair, exercise, diet, skin care and poise, can be applied to everyday life.

All students receive personalized instruction, Goodall said, and classes are limited to 10 students to insure that special attention is available.

There are three sessions starting in February, Goodall said. None of the classes can be taken separately from the entire six or eight-week courses.

The last course is a photography session from which students can purchase 8x10 prints, Goodall said. Enrollment into the school can mean preferential consideration for acceptance into the model agency, she added, though students might be sent on some of the shoots the agency participates in.

The agency certainly seems to have taken off since its inception. Goodall reports that they now have more than 150 models and have been scheduled for everything from television and video to print and fashion modeling.

Service cut; riders increase

Monterey-Salinas Transit has announced that despite cutting service by 8 percent in late November, ridership on the transit system in December was 17 percent higher than one year ago.

A total of 274,633 passengers were carried in December. Slightly over 21,000 were carried on the free shuttle with ridership on the regular, non-shuttle routes up by 9 percent over one year ago.

In late November, Monterey-Salinas Transit rerouted and rescheduled service with a net reduction of 8 percent of its service. Two routes were entirely eliminated, some schedules were dropped, and very little new service was added.

In addition to dropping the Carmel-Pacific Grove and one North County rural route, Monterey-Salinas Transit also reduced weekday service to Carmel, Marina, Skyline Forest and Glenwood Circle.

Service was rerouted on Fort Ord and at MPC. Two commute schedules were also added to line 28-Castroville connecting Castroville and Salinas. In addition to these improvements, the transit system went to a true "timed transfer" system with increased connection possibilities at the Monterey Transit Plaza and at the Salinas Transit Center.

According to MST General Manager Frank J. Lichtanski, year-to-date ridership for the new fiscal year that began in July is up 11 percent on regular routes and 28 percent if the free shuttle is included.

Lichtanski said that "December's ridership growth was particularly gratifying since it followed the service cut in November."

Lichtanski attributes the 28 percent ridership increase to the free shuttle, the new day pass, increased traffic and parking congestion, the existence of the new, timed transfer connections, the long-term effects of last summer's discounted youth summer pass, and the transit agency's ongoing marketing and public education efforts.

JUNIPERO SERRA School at Carmel Mission sponsored an open house Tuesday morning as part of Catholic Schools Week that continues through Feb. 9. The week is celebrated "to highlight instructional programs so the parents can see what we do here with the students," said Sister Geraldine, the principal. There are nine full-time and five part-time teaching assistants at the school of 220, of which 25 percent of the student body is non-Catholic. The student teacher ratio is 27-1. "Parents from all over the United States drop in on the classes and observe first hand the rapport between the teachers and students," Sister Geraldine said. Heart bubbles

To detect potentially fatal high blood pressure in the lungs, Stanford University heart researchers are trying to develop a non-invasive procedure that may be less risky, less uncomfortable and less expensive than current methods.

The procedure would replace the current technique of cardiac catheterization, in which a small hollow tube is inserted through a leg artery into the patient's heart chambers. Catheterization is restricted to acute-care patients and cannot be repeated indefinitely; the new procedure would be available on a routine basis.

Under the experimental method, specially manufactured microbubbles of carbon dioxide are injected into the patient's veins. When these tiny bubbles (4/1,000th of an inch thick) reach the heart chambers, the bubbles vibrate a frequency determined by the surrounding pressure. These vibrations are recorded by a microphone placed on the chest.

"The microbubble expansion technique provides an interesting approach to measuring intracardiac pressure," say the authors, nine members of the Stanford medical school's cardiology division and Rasor Associates of Sunnyvale, which produces the microbubbles.

The researchers' experiments have used the bubble technique on laboratory animals, but further development on the mass production of the bubbles — a substantial challenge — is needed before human testing begins, the authors say.

High blood pressure in the lungs, which is caused by stress, fatigue and heart problems, can cause a fatal rupture of the pulmonary artery. While this form of high blood pressure is presently difficult to diagnose, it can be corrected with drugs.

CONSCIENCE OF CARMEL BY GUNNAR NORBERG

Profound sense of loss

DURING MY 45 years in Carmel I have met many people who have taken an active interest in community affairs. Some have done so briefly though often intensely, even without much knowledge of an issue dividing the community.

Others have taken a casual interest in a variety of community issues but without bothering to find out much about any of them. Still other people — often woefully few — have made the effort and taken the time to inform themselves before taking stands on seriously moot issues. Still other people — and they are the fewest of all — have managed in a lifetime to study in-depth many issues, to add their own thinking to what they had learned, and then to take unswerving stands on the issues that have seemed most critically important to their own times in their own localities.

Last month Carmel lost someone in that last and most important category. When Charlotte Clark left this life, it was not only family and friends who were bereft and sorrowing but also an unnumbered many here and elsewhere whose lives she had touched and enriched.

It was in 1935 that she and her husband, Dr. Howard Clark, came to settle in Carmel, and it was not long before she became active in community affairs, rising to the presidency of the local unit of the League of Women Voters in 1939. Dorris Hammond, active in the league today, says Charlotte was always "a moving force" in any public task she would undertake whether as league president or in any other community activity.

When she served on the Carmel school board in the middle 1950s, retired Superior Court Judge Gordon Campbell was also a member of the same board and remembers the "enthusiasm" and the "dedication" with which she performed her tasks. And Stuart Mitchell, who was school superintendent at the time, remembers that Charlotte was "always deeply interested in every issue that came before the board." Another board member, Dorothy von Meier, remembers that Charlotte had "strong personal convictions" and that she was not shy about "standing up for them."

Marion Robotti, who headed the Carmel Women's Democratic Club in the 1960s, remembers that she was always an "outspoken advocate" for every issue she espoused "whether or not that happened to be popular" at the time when she spoke to the club membership about it. Marion Robotti also recalled that Charlotte Clark was "ahead of her time" in her effort to make concern about the environment a high priority item on the public agenda.

Sylvia Panetta, speaking for herself and her husband, Rep. Leon Panetta, said that Charlotte Clark "was always thoughtful, always articulate, and always stood out in a crowd," and that she "was always bright and cheery" as she took her forthright stands.

Former State Sen. Fred Farr thinks of Charlotte as a "tremendous and truly inspirational figure" and "a rare individual in her time." Referring to her stick-to-itiveness in pursuit of difficult goals, Fred said he was reminded of a crude description which would have suitably described Charlotte's persistence if such a description could have been applied to so gentle and charming a person as she always was. That crude description was this: "You've got to have fire in your belly to take and maintain unswerving stands on disputed issues."

Helen Arnold, who is now beginning her 10th year as a member of the Carmel City Council, thinks of Charlotte as her guide and mentor when she was trying to decide whether or not to consider accepting an appointment to fill a city council vacancy back in 1976. Charlotte had then been most influential in helping her reach the decision to venture into city politics, a decision which she has found rewarding.

In the last dozen years before her long final illness, Charlotte Clark was an active member of the Board of Directors of the Carmel Area Coalition which aims to do what I've called "Save Carmel and its environs for posterity" — an enormously difficult task because of the constant pressure exerted by yearning developers both far and near, upon decision-making city and county authorities. Such developers are driven by overwhelming greed, as Charlotte often said, and could if not sufficiently restrained, finally destroy all the wonderful Shangri La characteristics of the Carmel area which it has taken the better part of a century to achieve here as perhaps nowhere else in the world.

Stanley Worth, coalition president, said that Charlotte "cared very deeply for Carmel and all that it stood for, and made every effort she could to halt the over-commercialization which constantly threatened long-established Carmel values...and that effort is something for which Carmel Area Coalition members will always be grateful."

There are other organizations to which Charlotte Clark made important contributions during the half-century she lived here, but what I've recounted should give readers an understanding of what knowledgeable persons have had to say about her views and her achievements. There are also organizations which have formally honored her — notably the Monterey Quota Club which declared her to be its Woman of the Year in 1973 — but I believe informed readers would agree that any honors bestowed would have been richly deserved.

I talked with Marjory Remington who was doubly forlorn and bereft for she had lost her only sister, Charlotte, and her only brother, Henry Keyes, within the span of a single week. I asked about the years Charlotte had spent in Minneapolis, where she was born Feb. 10, 1902, where she had grown up, and where she had become an honors graduate of the University of Minnesota. Her college major had been political science. Her father was a lawyer who in 1935 briefly entered the political arena as a candidate for mayor of Minneapolis. During her growing up years, her maternal grandfather, Henry Turner Eddy, who lived nearby, was dean of the Graduate School at the University of Minnesota where he had been a distinguished professor from 1894 until his death in 1921. It was in such a family setting that Charlotte was motivated to play her own part as a responsible citizen in her home, in her community, and in the world she inhabited.

ON THE WARM, sunny Saturday afternoon of Jan. 25, some 100 men and women and children — family members and friends — came to a farewell gathering at the home on Randall Way in Carmel where Charlotte and Howard Clark had lived together for 50 years and where their children, Elton and Priscilla, had grown up, and where this afternoon the Clark grandchildren and other family members were visiting. There was little formality at the gathering. Late in the afternoon, Carl Pohlhammer called people together and he and others spoke about their recollections about Charlotte and her husband, Howard. Toward the end, Marjory Remington's husband, Wally, read about what he had written down in remembrance of Charlotte. Here is how he began:

"On her last Christmas night, Marge and I, along with Howard, were at Charlotte's bedside when Marge asked Charlotte: 'Would you like to hear Wally sing you a few songs?' Charlotte approved and, keeping down to a pianissimo, I started with an old familiar song that would take her back to childhood days. The song was 'Sweet and Low' and I followed it with the old English air, 'Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes.' 'Wonderful,' said Charlotte softly.

"In a little while we left the hospital room which Howard shared with Charlotte. I felt that this singing of long-remembered songs was equally touching and meaningful to me, the singer, and to Charlotte and Howard with their own shared memories. Soon Marge and I left them reminiscing, and walked out into a wonderful moonlit night. And it was very soon, just weeks later, that Charlotte left us all still remembering, and grieving."

JUST AS I WAS finishing this fond remembrance of Charlotte, Assemblyman Sam Farr called from Sacramento where he said, "a memorial resolution is in preparation for the state legislature to commend Charlotte Clark for her community activities and her public service." And speaking for himself, Sam said: "She was a truly inspirational person. And I greatly miss her as a friend."

My wife Wies and I can only echo Sam's words, and to add to it our own profound sense of loss.

CHURCHES

The Monterey Peninsula Unitarian Church has approved a resolution affirming the church's support of the Sanctuary Movement, thus becoming the first church in Monterey County to take a public stand on the issue of the right of Central American refugees to seek asylum in the United States.

The decision, passed by 91 percent of those voting on

Jan. 26, was a direct response to the resolution of the denomination's annual General Assembly in 1985 which declared support for churches that chose to give sanctuary to refugees.

Lorita Fisher, president of the church board, said, "The Sanctuary Movement is not only an act of compassion for those who have fled for their lives and are hungry and helpless in a strange land, it is also an expression of resistance to evil by governments against their citizens, a challenge to our own government to change its policies toward refugees, and a moving call to Americans to fulfill their historic responsibilities of keeping America a place where the oppressed will find refuge."

'Copters offer unique peninsula perspectives

By ANNE PAPINEAU

FOR A feeling of visual omnipotence, consider an excursion across Monterey County by helicopter.

It is a journey of uncompromising beauty, variety, and thanks to the transportation method — comfort.

There is something hedonistic, almost decadent about rising above it all to indulge in an eye feast that takes in some of the most stunning and costly real estate extant. The helicopter does it all for you, supplying a view that legs, automobile and even fixed-wing aircraft cannot.

Without risking a single sore muscle or bug bite, the slopes of the Ventana Wilderness come into view like those Technicolor mountains in the opening scenes of The Sound of Music. Of course, Julie Andrews is missing and the stereophonic music track is replaced by the rhythm of the chopper's revolving blades, but the Austrian Alps from the air have nothing over the Big Sur back country.

"How can I be a fat man and climb mountains?" inquired our pilot, Cliff Gaston, president of Cypress Helicopters. "I'll show you how to do it."

Responding to his own command, Gaston maneuvered the window-walled vehicle over road-less, trail-free terrain. From time to lands and extends east to Carmel Valley. Artichokes are still cultivated on the Odello property at the center of the photograph. (Photographs by Holly McFarland.)

time a residence comes into view, a home so remote it prompts Gaston to ask the co-pilot, Errol "Swannie" Swanson, "Can you imagine making a quick trip for some beer from that place?"

Gaston has flown helicopters in about as many of the capacities that the dexterous rigs can be put to work. A graduate of the old Sunset School in Carmel and later Robert Louis Stevenson, Gaston served two tours of duty piloting choppers in Viet Nam.

He said he spent three years on mapping expeditions in South America, is a veteran of seismic oil exploration and even flew the helicopters that relocated grizzly bears in Yellowstone National Park.

"We trapped 'em at garbage dumps in town," he explained. "There I am with a bag full of bears," Gaston said, pointing to photos in an album.

"This is kind of a unique market," he added. "Anything you can think of we can do."

To back up that statement Gaston recounts some of the tasks his company has undertaken since it opened last March. Among the jobs Cypress has accepted are flying a gazebo to an otherwise inaccessible construction site in Carmel Highlands, transporting the cameras for the aerial shots used in the opening of Doris Day and Friends and fighting from the air the Lexington fire that raged last summer in forested regions of Santa Clara and Santa Cruz counties.

"We used jellied gasoline helitorches to light backfires and dipped into swimming pools for water," he explained. Gaston describes helicopters as the "truck" of aviation.

Contracted by California Division of Forestry Region 5, which is headquartered at Monterey Peninsula Airport, Cypress Helicopters and the other helicopter rental companies located there play a vital firefighting role.

"Pick a fire, we were there," Gaston affirmed.

Other ways in which helicopters are utilized locally are scouting real estate for individuals and companies, assisting in rescues in both landlocked locations and at sea and conducting tours of the Monterey Peninsula.

THE MAJESTIC Big Sur coastline, miles and miles of it, provides a visual feast for air travellers. Highway 1 hugs the coastline, while the Point Sur Naval Facility — which here resembles an ocean-bordered mountain — can be glimpsed in the distance.

COUNT THE driftwood on Carmel Beach or ponder the exclusive real estate that borders it. Travelling by helicopter along this famous turf offers a new perspective of one of the most photographed shorelines on earth. In addition to transporting visitors, helicopters assist in local search and rescue missions, help douse fires and generally serve as transportation where no other rig will do.

THEATER REVIEW

BY JOANNE TENENBAUM

'Duet for One' equals tour de force for two

GROVEMONT THEATER'S first home-based season continues with Tom Kempinsky's Duet for One, a 1980 London Drama Critics Award-winning drama that explores in a knowledgeable and sensitive way a heightened and mysterious sort of relationship — that between patient and psychiatrist. Talking with a shrink may indeed be like playing a duet for one; certainly this play is a tour de force for two, for it makes equally great though differing demands on its two-character cast.

Children's storytimes set

The winter session of the Pacific Grove Public Library's storytimes for children will continue until Wednesday, April 16. Pre-school storytime, for children ages 2-5, is held every Wednesday at 10:30 a.m.

After-school storytime, for children ages 3-8, is held every Wednesday at 3:30 p.m. Each program lasts approximately 30 minutes.

Beginning Thursday, Feb. 20, the Children's Department of the Pacific Grove Public Library will start an additional pre-school storytime at 10:30 a.m. This storytime will run continuously until Thursday, April 17. For more information on all of these programs, call Lisa Maddalena at 373-0603.

Directed by Dan Gotch with nice emotional economy and effective pacing, Duet delineates the evolving relationship of Stephanie Abrahams (Rosamond Goodrich); a classical violin soloist lately stricken with multiple sclerosis, and Dr. Alfred Feldmann (Ron Cohen), the psychiatrist hand-picked by Abrahams' equally famous composer husband to help her adjust to her violinless future.

The action of the play takes place entirely in Feldmann's London office, an appropriately understated room featuring the typical accoutrements of his breed — oriental rug, rolltop desk, books of case histories — with one exception. Feldmann's office is overwired for sound, and his vast library of classical tapes and records makes the bold though silent statement that he has been chosen to treat Abrahams as much for his love of music as for his psychiatric skill.

Duet for One is composed not unlike a symphony, with each succeeding appointment another movement in the troubled music of Abrahams' life and Feldmann's attempt to treat her. Reinforcing this structure is classical interlude music wisely chosen by Assistant Director Jennifer Cohen. The music, counterpointing between scenes Abrahams the violinist, whom we never meet, and Abrahams as we see her, a desperate, wounded creature fighting for some kind of life without music, adds a powerful dimension to this well thought out production.

In six scenes, each of which is a therapy session, Abrahams and Feldmann put each other through the equally classical phases of neo-Freudian psychoanalysis. Abrahams' incidences of the transference and Feldmann's corresponding wall-like impassiveness are particularly striking examples of this kind of treatment; more to the point, they are powerful theater. Feldmann emerges as a benign detective of the dark forces of Abrahams' unconscious; Abrahams herself is quite like the violin so central to her life — an instrument capable of astonishing depth, variation and improvisation.

Rosamond Goodrich is perfectly cast as Abrahams, offering a rich performance that is captivating in its emotional control and variety. It is a virtuoso role, and Goodrich is just right for it. As Feldmann, Cohen sometimes teeters on the brink of caricature — the pipe-smoking, tweed-clad good doctor, a little ponderous, almost always frowning. His role contains only one verbal cadenza, the more powerful for its singularity, and this he handles with fine emotional understatement.

Kempinsky's script is permeated with an almost childlike reverence for the character of the psychiatrist, who emerges almost as a heroic myth. This is the play's only weakness, for Feldmann might have been created with more complexity and depth. But Duet for One is engrossing, even riveting at times, and Goodrich and Cohen, under Gotch's able direction, offer peninsula theater-goers a first rate dramatic experience in an impeccable production.

'Messiah' concert features Baroque-era instruments

THE SANTA CRUZ Baroque Festival begins its 13th season Friday and Saturday, Feb. 7 and 8 in Santa Cruz and in the Carmel Mission on Sunday, Feb. 9. The opening concert will be a West Coast premiere performance of Handel's Messiah, performed as Handel might have heard it with authentic instruments of the 17th century.

PAUL VORWERK will conduct Handel's Messiah, to be performed on authentic Baroque instruments as part of the Santa Cruz Baroque Festival. A concert is scheduled Sunday, Feb. 9 at the Carmel Mission Basilica. (Photograph by Schmucl Thaler).

More than 90 concerts have been presented in the history of the Baroque festival. Once known as the Festival of Living Music, the organization, headed by Linda Burman-Hall, has distinguished itself by performances in the style of the period, using replica instruments. Baroque playing styles and pitch, gut strings and original manuscripts. Additionally, the festival seeks out appropriate concert halls with approximate acoustic qualities of the period.

The Messiah, the first of six events scheduled for this year's season of early music, will feature a 20-piece Baroque orchestra, the UCSC Chamber Singers and four soloists under the baton of Paul Vorwerk. Specialists in Baroque performance style are being brought to Santa Cruz from New York, Seattle, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Berkeley/Oakland and Palo Alto.

Soloists for the Messiah include Max van Egmond, recognized for his authentic interpretations of Baroque music. The bass soloist has recorded for Telefunken and EMI, having received numerous award. Mary Rawcliffe, soprano, rejoins the Baroque Festival. Ann Wopatt, mezzo-soprano, will sing the alto solos. Harlan Hokin, tenor, has appeared on many concert stages throughout the Bay Area.

The Messiah, partially supported by grants from the Cultural Council of Santa Cruz County and the University of California Santa Cruz, will be performed Friday and Saturday, Feb. 7 and 8 at First Congregational Church, 800 High St., Santa Cruz. Final performance will be offered at the Carmel Mission Basilica on Sunday, Feb. 9. All concerts begin at 8 p.m.

Series tickets to the six-event Santa Cruz Baroque Festival are available at $45 for general admission, and $35 for seniors and students. For subscription information, contact the Baroque Festival at P.O. Box 482, Santa Cruz, 95061, or call 336-2173.

Single tickets will be available at Cymbaline Records, 1101 Cedar St., Santa Cruz; UCSC Campus Box Office; Jansen Music Store, 446 Main St., Watsonville; Abinante Music, 425 Alvarado St., Monterey; and Do Re Mi Music in The Barnyard, Carmel. Single tickets are priced at $10 and $8 for the Messiah.

THE 24-member Frulica touring company will stage dances of Yugoslavia Wednesday, Feb. 12 at Sunset Theater in Carmel. Tickets are $8.75 and $7.75. For reservations, call 624-3996.

Yugoslavian dance troupe performs

FRULICA, a company of dancers, singers and musicians from Belgrade, Yugoslavia, will appear at Sunset Theater in Carmel Wednesday, Feb. 12.

Founded in 1964 by Dragoslav Dzadzevic, former artist-director of the Branko Krstanovic Ensemble, the Yugoslav dance company Frula (parent company of Frulica), has become in its two decades one of the most noted ethnic ensembles in the world.

Frula has made five national tours of the United States and more than a score of tours to other parts of the world, winning attention for the theatricality and choreographic conceptions of its song and dance performances.

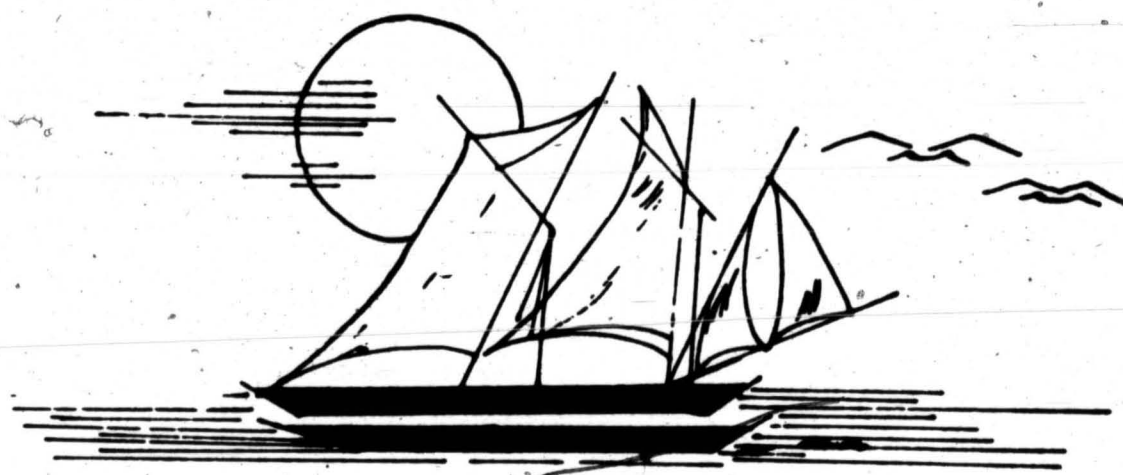

From the outset, founder Dzadzevic decided to dispense with authenticity, when authenticity interfered with audience enjoyment, and create song and dance adaptations of the complex, lengthy, and often monotonous dances from the seven republics that constitute present-day Yugoslavia.

Starting with an ensemble of 25 dancers, singers and musicians, Dzadzevic embarked upon a prolonged and intensive research and training program, taking his small troupe to the farthest reaches of their homeland to study and perfect the music and folkways they discovered there.

Following its initial successes in Belgrade, Frula was invited to tour Eastern European theater capitals, and subsequently, leading cities of Western Europe.

Frulica tickets are $8.75 and $7.75. The theater is on Ninth Avenue at San Carlos Street in Carmel. For reservations, call 624-3996.

Helicopters offer a unique perspective on peninsula

It was in his guise as tour pilot that Gaston offered a view of the peninsula available no way other than by helicopter. While a fixed-wing aircraft delivers the same overhead vistas, the helicopter can easily zero in on such features as a favorite hole at Pebble Beach Golf Course, a migrating California grey whale or whatever feature strikes the passenger's eye.

To riders accustomed to that long horizontal take-off characteristic of airplanes, there is novelty in the vertical lift-off of a small helicopter.

"You can see all the topography of the peninsula, from rolling plains to marble cones," commented Gaston into his headset.

Cypress Helicopters offers three set tours of the Monterey Peninsula. The 10-minute "Peninsula Tour" encompasses Cannery Row, Pebble Beach, Fisherman's Wharf, Point Joe, Spanish Bay, Cypress Point, the Lone Cypress and the Lodge at Pebble Beach. The price is $35 per person, three passenger minimum.

For $55 each, the Valley Tour hits all the Peninsula Tour sites, then travels above Carmel Beach, Carmel Mission, Carmel Highlands, Carmel Valley, Los Laureles and Laguna Seca. Travel time is 20 minutes.

The "grand tour" is the Big Sur trip, a one hour tour that, in addition to all the above locations, offers views of the Big Sur coastline and majestic Bixby Creek Bridge. The price is $150, three passenger minimum.

From our airbound vantage point we could see the far side of Bird Rock at Point Lobos, cattle grazing in luxurious Big Sur pastures and swimming pools we never dreamt existed.

Few animals seemed to take notice of the curious craft, although a herd of deer on the move near the Jamesburg Earth Station picked up their pace when the helicopter came into earshot. Sun sparkled off those pools and mistletoe crowded the trees, then the Monterey Peninsula Airport returned into view.

Depositing its camera and notebook-toting cargo, the "sky truck" had completed its latest, if least challenging mission.

MUSIC CORNER

BY JO ANN LA TORRA

Soloists shine in two concerts

AN UNUSUAL chamber music concert and a remarkable piano recital provided a good week of music on the peninsula.

Music from Marlboro, whose touring groups are a spin-off of Rudolf Serkin's chamber music-oriented Marlboro Music Festival, presented an evening of mix and match ensembles Jan. 31. This group of seven musicians was a piano quintet, plus flute and soprano.

The most interesting pieces were the two that included voice. Although there is a considerable amount of chamber music with voice, especially from the Baroque era and the last 100 years, it is not often heard. Singers interested in other than solo careers are almost inevitably pointed toward opera.

Neither Chausson nor Roussel is a household word, yet both have written good, solid, craftsmanlike music, sometimes surpassing even that, as with this evening's Deux Poemes de Ronsard by Roussel. Skillfully written for two soprano instruments, voice and flute, it is in an impressionistic vein — one song about a nightingale, one about sky, air and wind. Soprano Marvis Martin demonstrated why there has been considerable fuss about her of late. She has an easy, relaxed delivery that sustains a high tessitura without problem. Furthermore, she is a sensitive musician, very responsive in an ensemble setting. She was ably assisted by Michael Parloff, flute.

Chanson perpetuelle of Chausson is set for piano quintet and soprano. Less compelling for me than the Roussel, it was nevertheless an interesting work, and was competently performed by Martin and her colleagues.

The program opened with a Mozart flute quartet, K. 285b. It is not one of Mozart's great pieces, but mediocre Mozart is still far ahead of much music.

The Brahms F minor piano quintet was substituted for the A major quartet because of a change of pianists due to illness. Comparisons may be odious, but anyone who heard the Brahms at Hidden Valley last fall, with Jonathan Feldman at the piano, must have been disappointed with this one.

Both these works, and the Chausson as well, suffered from balance problems. In the Brahms, pianist Lydia Artymiw was placed behind the string quartet in such a way that she did not have easy eye contact with any of them. The piano was not able, under these circumstances, to assume the role of equal partner, although what one could hear of her sounded fine. The piano was not exactly subordinate; it was more like two concurrent events.

Each player was good, but the ensemble was not. There is a difference between playing together and playing at the same time; for the most part, the Marlboro group demonstrated the latter. Their styles of playing, even their various tones, were quite different. In this regard, Martin stood out as she strove to be one part of an ensemble rather than a soloist.

JONATHAN FELDMAN appeared at Hidden Valley in a solo recital on Sunday afternoon, and he continues to impress me as a wonderful musician who just happens to play the piano.

Opening with a Mozart sonata, K. 330, and following that with Beethoven, Op. 31 No. 2, he demonstrated an excellent affinity with the Classical era, including being very clear about what belongs to Mozart and what to Beethoven. His Mozart was crisp, with very little pedal and good, clean finger technique; the Andante was a walking tempo, not the funereal pace at which we too often hear these movements. It was still very lyrical.

Feldman's Beethoven was dramatic, as befits this work which changes moods in the wink of an eye. Throughout, he maintained an awesome intensity; one scarcely dared to breathe.

After intermission, he returned for a mixed bag of Romantic works. The Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso of Mendelssohn was witty; the first Arabesque of Debussy was very colorful; the Schumann Arabesque, not that composer's finest effort, was nicely done. The program closed with the G minor Ballade of Chopin. Feldman chose an interpretation with lots of drama and fireworks. He took more liberties here than elsewhere, although it was by no means distorted.

Chopin's Ballades have now reached a point of popularity (except No. 4, and especially No. 1) that rivals the popularity of the Polonaises a generation ago. They certainly are better works than the Polonaises, but my vote is to retire them for a while, which might give us a chance to recover some of the poetry. How about the Mazurkas? There is a lot of neglected, highly original music there. Not so flashy, perhaps, but very lovely.

Feldman is a real artist, and there is not much more than one can say. His playing is unaffected, it is from the inside out. One never has the idea that he is trying to impose his personality on the music, but rather that he is uncovering and clarifying for us the ideas of the composer. He deserved a standing ovation.

Clark Suttle to judge competition

CLARK E. SUTTLE, music director and conductor of the Monterey County Symphony Association, has been selected to be one of four judges of the Rotary Young Artist Awards Regional Piano Competition.

The competition for musicians between the ages of 18 and 30 is sponsored by the Rotary Club of Fresno and the Fresno Philharmonic Association.

In addition to judging the competition, Maestro Suttle will serve as guest conductor of the subscription concert of the Fresno Philharmonic Association. Winner of the competition will be guest soloist. The program will include Verdi's Overture to "La Forza Del Destino," Brahms' Concerto Number 2 and a piece to be performed by the soloist and the orchestra.

Judging of the contestants will be undertaken by Daniel Cariaga, music critic of the Los Angeles Times; Philip Lorenz, professor of music at California State University, Fresno; and William McGlaughlin, music director of the Tucson Symphony Orchestra.

Astronomy research institute initiates series of classes

The Monterey Institute for Research in Astronomy (MIRA) sponsors a class for individuals who wish to take a more active role in the activities of the institute. Classes will meet once a week from 7 to 9:30 p.m. in Lecture Forum 101 at Monterey Peninsula College, starting Thursday, Feb. 6.

The first class will feature a showing of the 1985-86 School Outreach presentation "Hitching a Ride on Halley's: The Story of a Comet and the Family of the Sun." It will be followed by a discussion of MIRA: its early beginnings, progress, current activities and hopes for the future. Anyone interested in learning more about Halley's Comet, the observatory and opportunities for volunteers at MIRA is welcome.

The class is designed to help volunteers with no previous background in science and math to understand the research and educational aspects of MIRA. It provides a perspective on the rapidly changing field of modern astronomy. This semester it will be taught by Cynthia Irvine of the observatory staff.

Currently, volunteer activities include MIRA's School Outreach Program, maintenance and tours at the observatory, assistance with the institute's lecture series, work in the library and help in the institute's administrative offices. Plans are underway to expand the level of volunteer participation in other aspects of the observatory's operations.

For more information, attend the class on Thursday or call MIRA at 375-3220.

Singing Rabbi will visit

ON TUESDAY Feb. 11, singing Rabbi Shlomo Carlebach will appear in concert in Carmel.

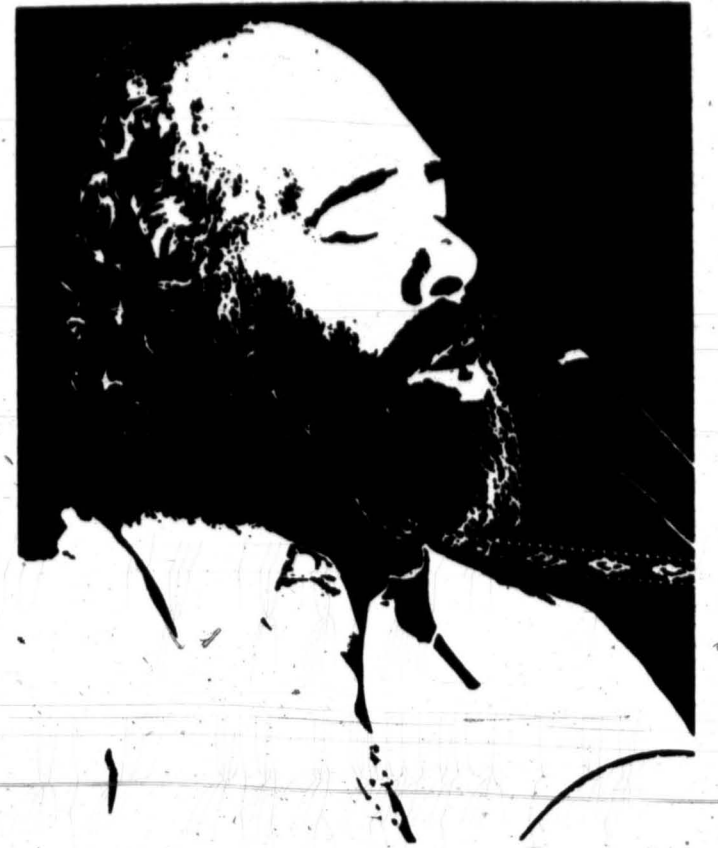

Carlebach, whose melodies and teachings have reached tens of thousands around the world, brings a message of peace wherever he goes. In his 30 years of travel he has appeared in most major cities and concert halls throughout the world.

Rabbi Carlebach comes from a long line of rabbis. In his youth he was recognized as a scholar of Jewish wisdom, but this led to his true calling when he took his guitar and began circling the world with his songs, stories and teachings.

His concerts are a blend of his soul-filled songs and melodies interwoven with holy stories and teachings. One day he may perform for a thousand Christian youths in Germany and the next study with a few people in a home in some other corner of the globe.

Rabbi Carlebach has recorded more than 30 albums and published two songbooks. Recently he participated in a New Year's retreat at Asilomar. He has appeared at numerous inter-faith gatherings and festivals.

Tuesday's concert will take place at the Boy Scout House, Eighth and Mission in

Friends of Jung sponsor lectures

THE MONTEREY Peninsula Friends of C.G. Jung, a support group devoted to enlarging knowledge of the Swiss psychiatrist's insights, will sponsor a series of lectures and workshops in Carmel.

Prior registration is required for the programs, which begin Tuesday, Feb. 18 with "Death as an Advisor." Max Schupbach, a psychologist in private practice in Zurich, Switzerland, will present the lecture. It will focus on process-oriented psychology, as developed by Jungian analyst Arnold Mindell.

Admission to the lecture is $10. It will be presented from 7 to 9 p.m. at All Saints' Church, Ninth Avenue and Dolores Street.

On Wednesday, Feb. 19, Schupbach will conduct a five-hour introductory workshop. Working with both individuals and the group, Schupbach will show how observation of language, posture, movement, voice and other signals help to identify underlying patterns of life process. Workshop fee is $25.

Other programs scheduled by Monterey Peninsula Friends of C.G. Jung are:

- "Know Your Type, Use Your Type," a workshop of applied psychological typology. Workshop leaders are Martha Carrick, Mary Jane Hennessey and Joseph Pagano.
- "The Seven Tasks of Later Life," a discussion seminar arranged for small-group concentration on each of the Seven Tasks as identified by Bruce Baker and Jane Wheelwright, Jungian analysts.
- "Making Images — Where Art and Psychology Meet," a lecture demonstration by Don Mathews, Monterey artist and teacher.
- A follow-up workshop, also led by Don Mathews.

For more information or details about workshops, write to the Monterey Peninsula Friends of C.G. Jung, 853 Pacific St., Monterey, 93940, or call 649-8809.
